...conomy's vital signs, ...nal product and the ... have provided addi... ...tantial evidence that ...s recovery from the ...ceeding steadily, and ...

...t least, the evidence ...olitical as economic ... Ford can reasonably ... continuing improve... ...istration forecast last ...is campaign for the ...nation. The new re... ...mably also reinforce his resistance to Congress on budgetary matters. The views of the Democratic majority there differ from Mr. Ford's both fiscally and philosophically.

These were the principal figures:

In the first quarter of 1976, the gross national product—the value of goods and services produced in the United States—rose by 7.5 percent, adjusted for inflation. Real per capita disposable income, or personal income after taxes adjusted for higher prices and a larger population, has returned to prerecession levels.

By two measures, the rate of inflation in the last three months has been the lowest since the middle of 1972. The gross national product Price Index showed an inflation rate of 3.7 percent; the Consumer Price Index rose .2 percent in March, to put the increase for the quarter at an annual rate of 2.9 percent.

On the economic barometer, those figures give a very good reading. What the Administrations critics are concerned about is another telling indicator: the unemployment rate. It was 7.5 percent last month, and Mr. Ford's plan for preserving recovery calls for only a gradual reduction this year. That percent translates to 7,000,000 jobless people, a number many Democrats consider unconscionable. Bills that would provide public works jobs while recovery is in progress are in Congress now. Mr. Ford maintans such programs are ineffective and too expensive.

Congress and Mr. Ford are also in disagreement over social spending and the size of the Federal budget for the 1977 fiscal year that begins Oct. 1. The President's proposed budget would slow economic growth, Congress's budget committees argue, because it is too restrictive. They have proposed a more expansionary budget that would, they say, stimulate the economy's upward trend without reigniting inflation.

Mr. Franjieh's Inevitable Step

Another step toward peace has been taken in Lebanon with President Suleiman Franjieh's signing of a constitutional amendment that will permit the country's Parliament immediately to select a new President. But every recent step toward peace has been tortuous in Lebanon—Mr. Franjieh delayed signing the amendment for two weeks as he tried to hold onto power while 50 people were being killed each day—and the coming weeks of delicate negotiations are unlikely to be smooth ones. There had been reports previously that Mr. Franjieh had signed the amendment, but they were false.

The removal of Mr. Franjieh, a Christian, had been a precondition by leftist Moslem leaders for their cooperation in seeking a political settlement to the year-old civil war. That the President would sign because of the leftist pressure was alway considered a probability if peace would result. It became a foregone conclusion on Friday when the rightwing Phalangist Party, The Christians' strongest organization, joined the leftists in demanding that he step down.

Two important steps remain. First the Parliament must meet (it has not yet set a date) and agree on a successor. Second, Mr. Franjieh must actually resign.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has predicted that these steps could happen within two weeks. But about 100 persons died in Lebanon on Friday alone despite a "cease-fire."

U.S. Residential Patterns: Still Separate and Unequal

During the 1960's, many of the nation's cities underwent a dramatic transformation that created a pattern of residential apartheid: predominantly black inner cities and predominantly white suburbs. It was this stark demographic pattern, more than any other fact, that forced the President's Commission on Civil Disorders, eight years ago, to the pessimistic prophecy that "our nation is moving toward two societies, one black, one white—separate and unequal."

And it was in the context of this same pattern, that the United States Supreme Court ruled last week that the judiciary might cross city-suburban limits in the effort to fashion remedies for residential segregation.

The pattern of segregation was created by a vast, in- and out-migration. In many of the older larger cities, middle-class white population flowed to the suburbs; their place was taken by poor, mostly black and Spanish-speaking persons. The 1970 Census showed that in the 216 metropolitan areas of the United States, 21 percent of the central-city populations were black, while only five percent of the suburban population was black.

Chicago as Case Study

Researchers John F. Kain and John M. Quigley pointed out in their 1975 study, "Housing Markets and Racial Discrimination," that "an important aspect of urban housing markets is the token representation of blacks in suburban areas. There is more than a germ of truth to the characterization of an increasingly black central city being strangled by a noose of white suburbs."

The transformation of the 1960's is well-illustrated by the example of Chicago, the nation's second largest city. Chicago's pattern is vivid but not unique: Half a million whites moved to the new housing tracts in what had been corn fields surrounding the city, while the urban core gained a third of a million black residents.

Prof. Pierre DeVise, a demographer, has calculated that Chicago also lost 211,000 jobs and gained 90,000 welfare recipients. The surrounding suburbs gained 500,000 jobs. By the end of the decade, the Chicago suburbs had acquired the bulk of the area's population—3.4 million compared with 3.2 million for the inner-city—and most of its affluence.

Early in this decade, some civil rights organizations became convinced that urban-suburban residential segregation would not end unless the suburbs accepted public housing. One of the organizations, the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, has argued that suburban governments ought to be "deprived of the power to exclude subsidized housing and to manipulate zoning and other controls to screenout families on the basis of income and, implicitly, of race." Little progress toward this goal has been achieved, however, partly because of diminished interest in civil rights by many of the white supporters of the 1960's and partly because suburban governments have proven intransigent.

Subsidized public housing has been anathema to the emigrees who now live in the suburbs, where the very mention conjures specters of high-rise "human warehouses" like those that have been erected in ghetto areas. Advocates of public housing argue, however, that it can be low-density and adapted to the suburban environment. And they maintain that it would provide the ultimate solution to segregated schools, an alternative to busing children. Moreover, the advocates contend that the booming suburban economies have created numerous semi-skilled jobs that could be filled by ghetto dwellers except that there is no place in the suburbs for them to live.

In the end, though, public housing may be a slim reed on which to base the prospects for integration of metropolitan areas. What should be the moving force behind public housing, the Department of Housing and Urban Development, has lacked a coherent national housing policy and has been troubled by low staff morale, scandals and administrative disarray. In the cities where it has built, the department, bowing to local pressures, has built mainly in black neighborhoods.

In practice, moreover, public housing construction has all but ceased because of a drying up of funds. As one housing official has put, public housing might eventually come to the suburbs sometime in the future "if we ever get a housing program that is satisfactory to Congress and the President—one that is funded properly, something that works."

It Has Been A Recession With Classic Features

By EDWIN L. DALE Jr.

WASHINGTON—The late, unlamented recession of 1974-75 is over. The economy has been moving up since last May. In retrospect, perhaps, the most striking feature of this recession was how classic both the decline and the recovery have been.

The recession's origins were somewhat unusual, because of the indirect effect on the economy of the explosion of world oil prices during and after the Arab oil embargo of late 1973 and early 1974. The degree of inflation that accompanied at least the early stages of the 1974-75 recession was also unusual. And it was the deepest of the six recessions since World War II.

But despite the fears of many that the world was plunging into economic catastrophe, the episode wound up being a fairly normal case history of the business cycle at work. The key to remember about the business cycle is that it is just that—a cycle. Business turns down, causing declining production and rising unemployment, and then it turns up again.

Such cycles are most easily explained by swings in inventories, or goods and materials businesses and manufacturers keep in stock. They played a typical and major role in the recent recession. Generally, because of a drop in consumer buying, sometimes for other reasons, businessmen find themselves with excess inventories. They stop ordering more goods, and their suppliers' production drops. The incomes of the workers that are laid off decline and, in the worst possible case, consumer buying drops some more and the cycle spirals downward.

More typically, inventories finally reach a satisfactory level, and ordering begins again. That is what happened this time.

In the fourth quarter of 1974, inventories were still increasing at an annual rate of $10.4 billion. Then liquidation set in, with reductions at a rate of $24.8 billion in the first quarter of 1975 and $29.6 billion in the second. Production plummeted. Just as suddenly, liquidation of inventories all but stopped in the second half of the year, and production and employment correspondingly turned upward and continued to do so in 1975. By the first quarter of 1976, a modest inventory accumulation had begun again, and was an important element in the jump in the gross national product reported last week.

Did Government policy have nothing to do with the successful recovery, then? The answer involves two different aspects of Government action.

The first are the "automatic stabilizers" that are now part of permanent law, the most important of which is unemployment compensation. Payment of some $19 billion in unemployment benefits last year was a major factor in preventing a decline in total consumer spending power. In this recession, the Government, mainly at the initiative of Congressional Democrats but with the concurrence of President Ford, extended the duration of benefits and added coverage for millions of workers.

The second are discretionary actions that are aimed directly at halting recession and promoting recovery. By far the most important in this recession was a very large tax cut, a combination of rebates on 1974 taxes and reductions in withholding in 1975. Both took effect in May 1975.

Shared 'Credit'

In this matter, political "credit" can probably be shared. After concentrating solely on reducing inflation in the months following his assumption of the Presidency in August 1974—in October he even proposed an anti-inflationary tax increase—Mr. Ford turned completely around when the evidence of deepening recession became compelling. In January 1975, he proposed a tax reduction, entirely in the form of a rebate, that would have come to $16 billion. Congress changed the procedure and enlarged the amount to $20 billion.

Did it matter all that much? Secretary of the Treasury William E. Simon has often argued in private that the low point of the recession was reached in April of last year and that an upturn was under way before the tax cut took effect in May. He does not deny, however, that the cut had an impact in spurring consumer spending, which has been the driving force for recovery so far.

Arthur M. Okun of Brookings Institution and a former chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers is convinced that the tax cut moved the inventory turnaround forward by at least three months. But he also believes that a recovery would probably have occured without it.

The tax cut, the impact on revenues of the reduction in some incomes and corporate profits associated with the recession, and the growth in unemployment compensation and other governmental outlays combined to produce an enormous budget deficit, slightly more than $80 billion, for calendar 1975. Despite Mr. Simon's early apprehensions, the Treasury was able to borrow this huge sum with no significant impact on interest rates.

Not only did the big deficit not raise interest rates, it did not worsen inflation. By the first quarter of 1976, inflation as measured by the Consumer Price Index had dropped to an annual rate of 2.9 percent, the lowest since 1972. Declining food prices were an important element in last week's pleasant report. That decline is unlikely to continue, in part because of rising costs in the livestock markets. But even if inflation worsens a bit this year, it will remain far below the double-digit rates of 1973-74.

The recession's most painful legacy is a still-high rate of unemployment, last month 7.5 percent of the labor force. Though all measures of unemployment and production have improved significantly since last spring, the recession was so deep that it left a wide margin of unused labor and industrial capacity.

In Summary

Egypt and China Sign a Pact to Be Read in Moscow

China and Egypt, once allies of the Soviet Union, have signed an agreement of cooperation that reflects animosity that now marks the relationship of each with Moscow. The agreement has tangible military benefits for Cairo and political implications obviously pleasing to Peking.

As part of the agreement Egypt will get Chinese spare parts for the Russian-built MIG-17 and MIG-21 planes that have not been refitted.

The pact was signed during a visit to Peking by Egypt's Vice President, Hosni Mubarak. The unusually warm welcome given the Egyptian reflected Peking's pleasure at having for the first time achieved a breakthrough in relations with a major Arab nation. The Chinese, in addition, immediately exploited the propaganda opportunities afforded them by the link with Egypt. At a dinner for Mr. Mubarak from which the Russian and East European ambassadors were conspicuously absent, China's new Prime Minister, Hua Kuo-feng, made his first public address and alluded to the Soviet Union as a "wicked and ruthless superpower."

Mr. Hua returned to the same theme at another banquet, to which the Russians were not invited, saying that Egypt's resistance of aggression and hegemonism—Peking's codewords for Soviet expansionism—had "met sympathy and wide support from the people of the world."

Sabotage In Rhodesia

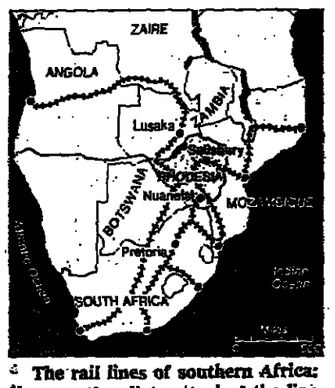
Rhodesian black nationalist guerrillas have committed an act of sabotage against a vital rail line in Rhodesia. The sole rail link between Rhodesia and South Africa was blown up and immobilized for a day last week, and in a separate incident three South African vacationers were killed.

The attack, relatively minor, will nonetheless have important economic and military consequences. But the principal result may be psychological: The complacency of white Rhodesians has been shaken more severely than at any time since the minority white Government in Salisbury declared unilateral independence from Britain 10 years ago rather than end policies of racial segregation.



The rail lines of southern Africa: nationalists attacked the line centered at Nuanetsi, Rhodesia.

The assault occurred five days before Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's two-week visit to meet with African heads of state. It is not known whether the timing was intentional, but the heightened tensions are certain to add to the urgency of the Kissinger visit.

South Africa's Policy

South Africa has continued to follow its policy of cooperating with the black African nations by pressuring the Smith Government to negotiate. Last week it was reported that Pretoria has taken the step — severe in terms of Rhodesia's needs — of pledging to provide no further military troops or equipment to Rhodesia.

India Reaches Out Again

The Government of India has proposed talks with Pakistan to end 25 years of strained relations between the neighbors on Asia's subcontinent. The Indian initiative followed by only four days the announcement of plans for the resumption, after 15 years, of diplomatic relations between India and China.

Prime Minister Indira Gandhi apparently had two motives in promoting the new, and largely unexpected, diplomatic initiatives.

First, she has been personally disturbed with international criticism of the emergency measures she imposed last year that all but erased civil liberties and democratic processes in India. In this context the new initiatives are viewed as a way to re-establish her position as a person of consequence in international diplomacy. Second, the diplomacy probably reflects a broader desire by the Government to reassert a leadership role among the nonaligned nations, whose heads of state will meet in August in Sri Lanka.

India was once considered the moral leader of the nonaligned countries, largely because of its strong stance during the Nehru era against the spread of nuclear technology. In 1974 India exploded its own nuclear bomb.

Castro's Angry Response to Ford

Following an attack, apparently by Cuban exiles, on Cuban fishing ships, Prime Minister Fidel Castro has responded angrily, calling President Ford a "vulgar liar" for his remarks last February about Cuba's sending troops to Angola. Mr. Castro threatened to abandon the 1973 antihijacking agreement that was one of the more visible symbols of improving relations between Washington and Havana.

Although United States officials promised to try to determine the identity of the fishing boat attackers and to "deter further such attacks," the incident seemed to have reversed progress toward resumption of normal diplomatic relations between Washington and Havana.

President Ford's remarks came as he courted the important Cuban exile vote in Florida's Presidential primary. The President called Mr. Castro an "international outlaw" for his actions in Angola. That may have won Mr. Ford votes (he won the primary, too) but, some analysts believe, it also apparently encouraged exile extremists to further violence.

Bribery at Italy's Highest Levels?

Italy's Christian Democratic Party, already facing an early election in which it is in real danger of losing the power it has held for three decades, has been further weakened by disclosures that at least one of its highest officials may have been involved in the Lockheed bribery scandal.

Italian newspapers, citing United States Senate documents, asserted last week that a former Christian Democrat Prime Minister—possibly Giovanni Leone, now Italy's President; Aldo Moro, the incumbent, or Mariano Rumor, now Foreign Minister—acted as intermediary for surreptitious payments by Lockheed between 1968 and 1970. The three men named have denied the charges.

Buffeted by serious economic and social unrest, the Christian Democrats are on the verge of calling a general election in June, a year early. The feeling in Rome is that the new Lockheed allegations, added to earlier charges about other similar bribery charges, could swing further support to the Italian Communist Party, which hopes to overtake the Christian Democrats in the voting and become the country's largest political force.

Portugal's Vote Is No Panacea

Portuguese voters are going to the polls today for their first free parliamentary election in nearly 50 years but for several reasons it is doubtful that the voting will end the political turmoil or install a stable government.

First, it is improbable that any single party will win a clear ruling majority. Second, almost any coalition or minority government will encounter strong opposition in putting forth programs. Third, the parliament will have to share power with a President to be elected in June and the relative authority between the President and the parliament has yet to be defined.

Thirteen parties are competing for 263 seats in the Assembly of the Republic, but only four of the parties are expected to win a significant number of seats—the Socialists and Communists on the left, the liberal Popular Democrats in the center and the conservative Popular Democratic Center.

A Little Bit of Colombia Votes

Despite apathy—70 percent of the 10 million registered voters didn't vote—the Liberal Party in Colombia, headed by President Alfonso López Michelsen, remains the dominant political force following local elections last week.

Apparent reasons for the small turnout were a belief that the Liberal victory was inevitable and that since the local governments are dominated by the central regime, only the presidential election in 1978 is really important. The middle-of-the-road Liberals won a clear majority of the votes cast, with the Conservatives picking up most of the remainder. Small percentages went to leftist groups.

Somehow, Africa Has Managed to Keep Calm

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN

NAIROBI—White and black Africa are still waiting for the other shoe to drop.

● When the constitutional talks between black nationalists led by Joshua Nkomo and Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith collapsed last month there was a general expectation that open warfare similar to the Angolan conflict would erupt on a large scale. It did not.

● Mozambique closed its borders, interdicting Rhodesia's vital rail link to the Indian Ocean. Zambia's President Kenneth Kaunda, who almost alone among the leaders of neighboring black African states had been holding out for a peaceful resolution of the Rhodesian impasse, finally announced the issue would have to be settled in blood. Little has been spilled. But Mr. Kaunda will doubtless repeat his fears to Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger who begins an African trip this week.

● There was talk that the Russians, having scored a success in Angola, would now turn their attention to Rhodesia and that some of the 12,000 Cuban troops still in Angola might be ferried around the Cape of Good Hope to Mozambique where they could spearhead an offensive against the modest forces of white Rhodesia. The country's 1,100-mile border with Mozambique is difficult to defend and the terrain is well suited for guerrilla warfare. The threat of such remains—but just that, a threat.

Few observers in the region and few specialists elsewhere predicted a month ago that the situation in the ensuing month would simmer and fume but remain fundamentally unchanged. It seemed that the force of history in Africa of more than two decades of expanding liberation had suddenly come to bear on the struggle over Rhodesia and that the momentum for quick escalation of the guerrilla warfare was irresistible.

That that was not the case involves factors that are varied and complex.

At the time the talks between Mr. Nkomo and Prime Minister Smith broke off a subdued guerrilla war was in fact entering its third year. The nationalist faction led by Bishop Abel Muzorewa had denounced the talks. Infiltrators moving in small bands and armed mainly with Chinese weapons concentrated their terror attacks on Rhodesian blacks and isolated white farmers. White Rhodesia, whose standing army has only 5,000 men, issued a call-up, augmenting its active reserve in anticipation of stepped-up conflict.

There are said to be 15,000 black Rho camps just across the Mozambique border, intelligence puts the figure at 9,000, according to the Rhodesians, many of young men of junior high school age who over in recent months. # A Little Indian Diplomacy Is a Lot

By WILLIAM BORDERS

NEW DELHI—As India's leaders peer across this country's tense and well-guarded borders, their greatest fear in recent years has seemed to be that China and Pakistan, two powerful and hostile neighbors, would unite militarily, in a joint attack.

That is why there are always so many Indian soldiers patrolling frontier areas, most of them in desolate Himalayan outposts, and why India has built up the world's third largest army, surpassing even that of the United States.

But in the last ten days, India has acted to defuse the threat from the north and west, with diplomatic overtures designed to improve relations with both China and Pakistan.

First India said that it was sending an ambassador to China for the first time in 15 years, as part of an "endeavor to develop amicable relations with all countries, notably our neighbors."

Then it announced that Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and Pakistan's Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, in an exchange of letters, had agreed to reopen negotiations that might lead to the restoration of diplomatic relations, which were broken off four years ago.

Knowledgeable analysts here cautioned that neither diplomatic move was, in itself, of any great significance; India has a broad range of outstanding problems with each of its two big neighbors, and solutions cannot come easily. But as one diplomat put it:

"At least, they're talking again; there's movement, and that's a good sign."

The relationship with China had been badly strained since just before the brief war they fought along their mountain frontier in 1962. Each country's embassy in the other's capital had maintained only a skeleton staff, headed by a charge d'affairs.

The border disput that led India and China into battle remains unsolved, and there are other differences between the two countries, including rivalries for the allegiance of the Himalayan kingdoms of Nepal and Bhutan, and the continuing Chinese assistance to Indian insurgents in eastern India.

But between them, China and India have one-third of all the people in the world, and the upgrading of their relationship to the ambassadorial level was generally regarded as a contribution to international political stability, particularly in light of the fact that both countries have joined the world's nuclear club during the years of their estrangement.

India's overture toward Pakistan was more tentative. All that New Delhi and Islamabad have agreed upon is that they will meet, probably in the Pakistani capital, to try to work out their differences. These include the matter of communications links and the emotional issue of overflights, the right of one country's planes to fly over the other's territory. These talks between the two nations will be a continuation of a series that have been held following the brief war they fought in 1971, talks that were broken off nearly a year ago.

It is difficult to determine the significance of the two diplomatic moves because of the relationship of the two countries that were recipients of the Indian olive branches. During the years that Pakistan and China have both been estranged from India, they have become close allies. Now, there is some thought here that the Pakistanis might feel that their crucial little brother relationship with the Chinese is threatened by the improved rapport between Peking and New Delhi.

Outside of that tight Asian triangle, India's relationship with Bangladesh has taken a sharp downturn since last August, when Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, who was a close ally of India, was assassinated.

Just last week, for example, the Indian Government charged Bangladesh troops with having fired across the tense border north of Dacca, at troops in the Indian state of Meghalaya, where both sides have reported other armed incursions in recent months. The new Government in Dacca has also displeased New Delhi by making overtu tan and China, and even resuming diplo tions with Pakistan, the country of wh the eastern wing before the war of 197 of India's latest diplomatic offensives significantly to peace in the subconti obviously benefit Bangladesh, which i hopeless and grievously overpopulated this part of the world.

This document, negotiated over a period of six months, was a kind of nonaggression pact. Castro aides said at the time they expected it to lead toward a general normalization of relations. They were bitterly disappointed on this score by President Richard M. Nixon, who had remained militantly anti-Castro ever since he met the Cuban leader as Vice President in 1959.

The fourth stage Cuban-American diplomatic maneuvering began a little over a year ago on the strength of conciliatory statements and gestures by President Ford, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and Mr. Castro. The Cubans received a series of American Senators, Congressmen and journalists, muted their rhetoric on the continued presence of the United States Navy base at Guantanamo, returned a $2 million ransom seized earlier from an airline hijacker and repatriated a few Americans who had been detained on various charges.

The Ford Administration responses included proposals to negotiate, a widening of the radius in which Cuban diplomats at the United Nations could move outside New York from 25 to 250 miles, a vote in favor of lifting the Organization of American States embargo on Cuba and, on Aug. 21, a lifting of sanctions against third countries trading with Cuba. There was also talk in Havana and Washington of exhibition baseball games involving Cuban and American players. At the peak of cordiality, in late July and early August, Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Castro exchanged private messages about beginning actual negotiations.

"Kissinger definitely wanted to go ahead," one of his aides said. "But something stayed his hand. It was Reagan."

There was evidently a strong fear in the Ford camp, even before the Angola events and Cuba's propaganda gestures in September on behalf of Puerto Rican Marxist rebels, that a substantive move to re-establish ties with Havana would cost the President too heavily in Presidential primaries against former Gov. Ronald Reagan.

Mr. Castro and his aides detected this reluctance, too, and when asked in January "what had gone wrong in the rapprochement," they replied: "Your elections."

Other important factors have also affected Cuban-American relations since the Bay of Pigs: Mr. Castro's fear of invasion during the 1960's and his own indulgence in supporting leftist guerrillas of other Latin American countries, the actions of the Central Intelligence Agency throughout the 1960's to undermine the Castro regime, and, finally, tightening American economic strictures on Cuba.

There were also positive actions on both sides, including Mr. Castro's decision to let 200,000 Cubans emigrate to the United States from 1966 to 1973 and the termination of American covert intelligence operations against Cuba.

But for all the tentative moves toward conciliation and all the threats, counter-threats and subversion, the relationship in the spring of 1976 stays frozen in what one American official termed "institutionalized hostility."

A severely screened handful of Cubans is allowed to visit the United States to attend international conferences (although last year Cuba admitted 800 Americans on official business). Cuba purchases a small amount of American medicine and prophylactics allowable outside the 1961 trade embargo and receives about $5 million in food parcels for relatives of exiles.

Beyond these minimal formalities and a few sporadic niceties like cooperation on Caribbean hurricane warnings and the recent admittance of the great ballerina Alicia Alonzo to dance at the Kennedy Center, there is a frigidity.

"We have brought it to the point of having to start all over again," an American official said of rapprochement, "after the elections." He said it with the sadness of a man who had watched something valuable slip out of his grasp.

The Winners In Portugal to Face the Old Difficulties

By MARVINE HOWE

LISBON—On April 25, 1974, a group of Portuguese captains and majors, with their troops brandishing red carnations, overthrew the 48-year-old right-wing dictatorship and pledged to restore democratic civilian rule as soon as possible.

After a succession of right- and left-wing coup attempts and general political instability, the Portuguese are at the polls today to elect the people who are to try to govern them for the next four years.

The armed forces who initiated Portugal's original and bloodless revolution are still in control. Nevertheless, they have voluntarily agreed to turn over political power to the politicians and confine their own role to that of guarantors of the democratic institutions. This does not mean that all the military have abandoned their political ambitions or that the transition to civilian rule will be smooth and easy.

After what amounts to a two-year hiatus of effective rule, this country desperately needs a firm and cohesive government to solve the staggering social and economic difficulties. Severe structural weaknesses of the former right-wing colonialist regime have been compounded by the hasty, unreflected and often contradictory actions of the six provisional governments since the revolution.

The Portuguese voting will indicate which party the people believe will be best able to solve the following litany of difficulties:

- A huge balance of payments deficit. Emigrants' remittances and tourism revenue, Portugal's chief sources of foreign exchange, are down dramatically because of the climate of instability.
- A significant drop in production. Factories have closed or slowed down largely because of labor problems and faulty management. This has been coupled with soaring unemployment. The number of jobless has reached half a million or about 15 percent of the labor force.
- Refugees. There are 800,000 refugees from Portugal's former African colonies and by the end of June there will be one million, most of them without jobs or homes.
- Stagnant investments. The Government has failed to define clearly the public and private sectors or to settle on priorities for development. One result of this failure has been the near bankruptcy of the newly nationalized companies; fifty percent of them are said to be running on state subsidies.
- The widely contested agrarian reform program. Most of the lands have been illegally expropriated and without compensation.
- The chaotic education system. There is no direction or control.

The Continuing Tensions

Each of the major parties has presented its program for what is generally called "national reconstruction" to define their positions on the revolution's "way to socialism." The Socialist Party says that the revolution has gone far enough and errors must be corrected. The Communists insist it must be pushed ahead. The Popular Democrats feel it has gone too far and must be pulled back. And the Centrists hold that it must be undone and started over again.

Whatever the results of today's legislative election, the political tension will continue as the country prepares for presidential elections in two months time. Under the new Constitution, promulgated earlier this month, the president shares political power with the legislature. It is generally agreed that if the new Assembly of the Republic should be weak and divided, the President will have to be a strong man and most probably a military man. There are as yet no declared presidential candidates but there has been a good deal of obvious maneuvering by possible candidates and their supporters, and this has added to the old tensions within the military.

First the country lived through what was called Spinolism, named for the active but essentially conservative colonial war hero, Gen. Antonio de Spinola, who was drafted by the captains as the revolution's first President. Moves by the Spinolists to take over the revolution resulted in two fiasco coup attempts, on Sept. 28, 1974 and March 11, 1975, and in the exile of the unwitting general and his close aides.

Leftist reaction to the bungling of the Spinolists led to Gonçalvism or the period dominated by the pro-Communist Prime Minister Gen. Vasco Gonçalves, Gen. Otelo Saraiva de Carvalho, the erratic far leftist Security Chief, and Gen. Francisco da Costa Gomes, the enigmatic leftist President. During this period, Communists and far leftists took over key posts in the administration, media and unions, and deeply penetrated the armed forces.

An offensive last summer, led by the Socialist Party and left-of-center military got rid of General Gonçalves. The new coalition Government, led by moderate-leftist Adm. José Pinheiro de Azevedo, was virtually powerless because Gonçalvism remained a powerful force, particularly in the armed forces.

A hasty, ill-planned coup attempt last Nov. 25 by leftist paratroops, with the open support of far leftists and initially the Communists, brought profound changes in the power arrangements. There was a widespread purge of far leftists and Communists in the administration, the media and military as well as the arrest of about 150 military men including some of the heroes of the revolution.

The new group of military leaders dominating the ruling Council of the Revolution were described as "operationals" as opposed to General Gonçalves and his "military politicians." The operationals have succeeded in restoring a certain order in the country, giving authority to the Pinheiro de Azevedo Government and introducing new discipline in the armed forces.

The leader of the operationals, Gen. Antonio Ramalho Eanes, Army Chief of Staff, is the favorite presidential candidate of the non-Communist political parties. General Eanes has two handicaps: his youth — only 41 — and the widespread belief that he is needed in his operational post as head of the still jittery army. His principal undeclared rival is President Costa Gomes, who enjoys the strong backing of the Communist Party, and for this reason has many enemies.

On the right, the Social Democratic Center has been pushing the candidacy of popular Gen. Carlos Galvão de Melo, who initially supported the April 25 revolution but has since parted company, sharply attacking decolonization, agrarian reform and nationalizations.

Finally, in the wings, General Spinola is waiting impatiently, with his Democratic Movement for the Liberation of Portugal. He is given no serious chances of a political comeback but is still capable of making trouble. His recent, much publicized, attempt to buy arms for his "liberation army" has been used by the Communists to try to discredit General Eanes and the present military leadership and restore a climate of insecurity here.

The rate of inflation has been reduced from over 30 percent in 1974 to less than 20 percent now. Economic activity is on the upswing, with a boom in international prices for coffee, Colombia's main export, assuring plentiful foreign exchange for imports. The credit policies of the administration have generated an upturn in new exports, including sugar, rice, beef, leather goods and other manufactures. There are indications that unemployment, estimated at 12 percent of those seeking work, will be reduced.

But farm workers in coffee fields, producing big profits for the owners, earn less than $2 a day. Women stitching handbags for export to fancy shops in Paris, or boning Caribbean fish for restaurants in Miami, or cutting carnations to be flown to New York from the hothouses here, also earn subsistence wages.

While the wealthy, including a new class of smugglers of emeralds, cocaine and marijuana, which is going mainly to the United States, display extravagant wealth, such as foreign automobiles that cost from $10,000 to $25,000 here, the persistence of low wages, slum housing and rural poverty is fodder for radical politics.

"The reason behind the political uneasiness one feels here is a moral problem. There are too many rich who don't give a damn," said a young entrepreneur at a discotheque where the swinging Bogota set will spend in one night what a factory worker earns in a month.

Mr. López Michelsen, who has mellowed from a politically radical, but democratic, position 15 years ago into a pragmatic reformer, has put through a major tax revision, designed to redistribute income. Much of these new funds, along with international loans, are being channeled toward nutrition and health programs in rural areas, where medical studies show that protein deficiencies and intestinal parasites are affecting millions of children.

"We are producing a stunted generation that does not have the strength to study in school," said Albert Restrepo, an economist working in a rural development program.

The State of Siege

These endemic problems arouse revolutionary sentiments among some young, educated Colombians who have rebelled against the gradual, reformist approach of the governing system. Some have become guerrillas. There have been kidnappings for ransom, political assassinations and occasional attacks on military patrols.

Faced with this security problem, the Government has maintained an official state of siege since President López Michelsen took office. The military courts try subversives, including extremist students who have forced the closing of several universities.

The election does not indicate that many Colombians support this radicalism. But subversive activities are expected to continue as foreshadowed by the killing of José Raquel Mercado, the moderate president of the Colombian Workers Confederation. He was executed the day after the election by an extremist group that had kidnapped him, demanding that the Government release imprisoned subversives.

Extremist violence is not yet present on a scale to challenge the Government's stability. But it is a reminder to the political parties that lack of unity and cooperation, leading to factional conflicts and impasse in government, could be fatal for Colombian democracy.

In Summary

The Campaign: The Phantom of The Primaries

The spring acceleration in the Presidential season begins this week, with two big primaries in two big states, Pennsylvania on Tuesday and Texas on Saturday.

There are, in effect, four Democratic candidates in Pennsylvania. Jimmy Carter, ex-Governor of Georgia, Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington and Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona are declared. Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, is unannounced.

There are also two contests, the preferential Presidential or popular vote, and the selection of 178 delegates to the Democratic Convention. Mr. Carter has concentrated on the former, and is expected to do well. Mr. Jackson has predicted victory in the latter, and may do well, for two reasons: He has the energetic support of organized labor, and the backing of the formidable statewide party apparatus.

But the meaning of the outcome for both men will be complicated by the active though unofficial presence of Mr. Humphrey, the choice of much of labor. How many Jackson delegates will really be Jackson-cum-Humphrey delegates may not be determined until the convention, or shortly before it; how indicative the Carter vote will be of his electoral base in a Northern industrial state may have to wait for other contests.

The strategy of the former Governor of California, Ronald Reagan, has been not to challenge President Ford for Pennsylvania's 103 Republican delegates, but to try to take Texas's more conservative 100. Many analysts now think Mr. Reagan will have more than half.

Last week, Mr. Reagan continued to press on what he considers to be Mr. Ford's dangerously permissive foreign policy, and again linked Mr. Ford to Watergate. Mr. Ford responded to the national security issue in his sharpest terms yet, calling the subject too grave for debate on it to be "cast in exaggerated rhetoric" and based on "oversimplification."

A Democrat on Subject A

Senator Frank Church of Idaho has made explicit the issue most other contenders for the Democratic nomination have only referred to in code, if at all. The issue is Watergate, and Mr. Church raised it at almost every campaign stop in Nebraska, attacking President Ford's pardon of Richard M. Nixon. That state's primary on May 11 will be Mr. Church's first test.

That the Democrats are aware of this obvious liability for the Republicans in November is evident in the fact that each Democratic candidate has sought to show he can restore trust in politics. But except for Mr. Church, a late entry in the preconvention race, they have acted, so far, on the assumption that Watergate is properly a postconvention question.

Passage of legislation that would reconstitute the Federal Election Commission and consequently resume payment of matching subsidies to Presidential candidates is likely to be prompt when Congress reconvenes this week. What is less certain is whether President Ford will veto the bill.

The Administration is concerned that the bill as written gives the Democratic majority in Congress too much control over the commission, which establishes and enforces groundrules for elections as well as authorizing Federal subsidies to candidates that qualify for them. But Mr. Ford also has another set of political considerations. Subsidy payments have been interrupted since Mar. 22, and only his campaign is now financially sound. A veto would leave him open to charges that he was using his Presidential prerogatives to cripple his opposition.

Costly Military Manpower

A study commission created by Congress has concluded that there is no way to reduce the spiraling manpower costs of the nation's 2.1 million-man armed forces without damaging servicemen's morale. The conclusion is a rebuff to President Ford, who has proposed the scaling down of military pay and fringe benefits to help control defense spending.

When the commission, directed by former Deputy Army Chief of Staff Bruce Palmer Jr., was created in 1973, there was much concern in Congress about the growth of manpower costs. However, Congress now seems inclined to resist Mr. Ford's proposed cutbacks, apparently because of pressure from military lobbying organizations, and the report is likely to reinforce that inclination.

Manpower costs now account for 55 percent of the defense budget, and they have been growing more rapidly than other items. Military pay has doubled in the last decade, and the cost of Pentagon pensions has increased from $1.2 billion in 1964 to $8.6 billion for fiscal 1977.

President Ford has recommended such economy measures as reducing commissary and post exchange subsidies, limiting supplementary cost of living increases, and reforming the retirement system. But the commission reported that these benefits were too important to military personnel to be curtailed.

Boston's New Violence

Racial tensions in Boston, which have been continuous since a Federal judge ordered busing for school desegregation nearly two years ago, have worsened despite attempts by city and state officials to calm them.

Mayor Kevin H. White has been caught in the middle on the busing issue, criticized by blacks for a lack of leadership, and by whites displeased with what they see as his probusing sympathies; they voted heavily against him last fall.

The sudden new violence the last 10 days has left two persons hospitalized and in serious condition. A white auto mechanic was dragged from his car on Monday by black youths and severely beaten, and a white teenage girl was injured in a stoning when her father accidentally drove through a predominantly black housing project. Last weekend a black bus driver was beaten by white youths in South Boston as were three white and one black co-worker who came to his aid.

Injured victim of the bomb explosion at a Boston courthouse.

To try to demonstrate that the majority of Bostonians are against the violence and for desegregation, Mayor White last week organized a "unity procession" of thousands of citizens.

Despite the gesture, the city remained polarized. White opponents of busing and poor blacks stayed away from the parade. Beatings of whites by blacks and of blacks by whites have inflamed both groups. Black leaders have warned that they may set up "internal security efforts" of their own in their own neighborhoods if the incidents continue.

The atmosphere was further darkened by a dynamite explosion in the county courthouse, although officials said the blast was unrelated to the busing dispute. The courthouse switchboard had received a warning that the bomb would go off but it exploded before the building was evacuated and 21 persons were injured.

Following the blast, Governor Dukakis and other officials made television appeals for calm but the mood in both black and white districts remained uneasy and, as officials admitted privately, seemed to be growing uglier.

Homemade Volkswagens

The German company that makes Volkswagens has decided to build its first plant in the United States, creating about 5,000 jobs for American workers, in an attempt to increase its diminishing share of the American car market. The decision is a significant consequence of the long-term devaluation of the dollar against the German mark.

Although the decision, which will deprive German workers of jobs, had long been opposed by some company directors, it was made, the company said, because currency changes had made Volkswagens too expensive to compete with domestic and other foreign cars. Since 1971, when the dollar's value began to decline, Volkswagen's annual sales in the United States in have dropped from more than 500,000 to 267,727 last year.

Possible locations for the plant in Ohio or Pennsylvania are under consideration.

Two Upcoming Primary States Are Not What They Seem

Pennsylvania, Home of Quixotic Politi[cs]

By JAMES T. WOOTEN

PHILADELPHIA—There have been primaries in Pennsylvania before, but none of them has ever seemed quite so important as this year's version this Tuesday. As a result, the candidates and their entourages are spending considerable time these days getting acquainted with the state that William Penn once called "my blessed Eden."

That was more than two centuries ago, and although the state has lost something through the years, the reporters and the politicians are discovering that Pennsylvania still has its reservoirs of natural beauty. From primly manicured farms of rolling Dutch country west of Philadelphia through the mountains and forests of the central portions of the state to the first, flat hints of middle America beyond Pittsburgh, the state draws thousands of tourists and vacationers each year. This year, thousands more are touring forts and stockades from the French and Indian war of the 1750's and 1760's, stroking the Liberty Bell, listening for echoes of those colonial habitués of Independence Hall turned revolutionaries debating life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Resident Pennsylvanians are hearing a somewhat different debate in the current Democratic primary campaign. Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington, for instance, is stressing his cordial relationship with organized labor and his promise to provide new jobs—strong political medicine in a state with 1.3 million union members and an unemployment rate that only recently slipped below 10 percent.

Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona is diligently working the ethnic and black vote, emphasizing his record as a champion of their interests. That approach too has merits in a state that is home to 1.1 million black people and nearly 1.5 million children or grandchildren of immigrants.

Jimmy Carter's approach has been more eclectic, but the former Georgia Governor's support for the sanctity of ethnic neighborhoods against Government interference has also been popular. More than half of Pennsylvania's 11.8 million people live in the suburbs of the cities scattered across the state.

Roughly 30 percent of the rest live in the cities, and the other fifth—approximately 2.2 million people—reside in the rural reaches of the state, although only about 110,000 of them are actually engaged in farming. Most of them, in fact, are part of the enormous number of blue-collar workers in Pennsylvania's steel mills, coal mines, clothing factories and shops where electrical equipment is manufactured.

The work force in the state is now almost evenly divided between white collar and service workers, and blue-collar employees. In the 1950's, when industry was a much more dominant component the ratio was 3 to 2; as late as 1940 there were four factory workers for every clerk.

The Depression and new technologies initiated decline in the importance of industry and as a result, the state's once healthy economy grew sluggish. With fewer factory jobs available, the rate of population growth also declined. Now it is the slowest in the country. Once the second most populous state, Pennsylvania now ranks fourth.

The population shift has had important political consequences. In 1950, Pennsylvania had 32 seats in the House of Representatives. Now, it has 25. But before the fifties, the Depression and President Roosevelt's New Deal had already begun to work another and more radical change, in voting patterns. Until after World War II, Pennsylvania was considered one of the Republican's safest havens. Many of the immigrants who settled in the state to work the mines and the mills had been immediately enrolled as Republicans, and their loyalty seldom wavered. Pennsylvania was one of the few states that went for Herbert Hoover in 1932.

Now, its politics are quixotic. Democrats now hold a 1.3 million edge in registration, with 2.8 million voters in the party's ranks, [...] dominate the Congressional delega[tion]. Still in 1972, the state voted for Ric[hard Nixon].

Texas Is City Country; Conservatism Is King

By JAMES P. STERBA

HOUSTON—Texas holds its first Presidential primary on Saturday. The contest was designed by Democrats, who have traditionally dominated politics here, with intricate rules made to favor their party's Senator, Lloyd M. Bentsen, in his now-defunct campaign for the Democratic nomination. It has become a Republican main event, in which Democratic cross-over votes may make the difference for former California Governor Ronald Reagan or President Ford.

In Texas, Democrats vote mostly conservative, and they outvote Republicans five- and six-to-one. As in other Southern states, the Republican Party has made only slow inroads on the state's political machinery. But its most celebrated convert, John B. Connally, the immensely popular former Governor, has made being a Republican something less than a sin, and increasingly, Texans, especially wealthy urban and suburban, are getting the message. Texas, in short, is no longer the undisputed domain of cows, ranchers, grand and small, and old-style Democrats.

Texas is now the third most populous state with 12.5 million people. And three out of four of them live in cities. Roughly 60 percent of them, in fact, live in just three metropolitan centers: Houston, Dallas-Fort Worth and San Antonio. It is a new urban, industrial state with few of the problems the old ones have. Its economic base is its oil and natural gas industry, from which since World War II has grown the biggest petrochemical complex in the world, giant steel works, engineering and research complexes, equipment fabrication yards and the nation's third busiest port. Then there are electronics, aerospace and military-related industries. Hundreds of companies have moved in from other states because they consider Texas to have "the best business climate in the nation," as Fantus Company, a subsidiary of Dun & Bradstreet, has put it.

Why? No corporate or personal income taxes, weak labor unions, financially healthy local and state governments, low welfare burdens and minimal government interference in the free enterprise system, are cited by new and old as a few of the reasons.

In the first half of this decade, more Americans moved into Texas than into any other state except Florida. When the nation's unemployment rate hit 8.3 percent last December, it was three percentage points lower in Texas, and thousands [...] unfilled. Yes, the energy crisis affect[ed Texas] in exactly the opposite way it affe[cted the rest] of the country. It helped bankroll the s[...]ing growth right through the recession.

from the beginning r. Tower, Senators Barry Goldwater of Arizona, Howard Baker of Tennessee, both Republicans, and Edward Morgan, Democrat of North Carolina, were more sympathetic to the intelligence agencies than their colleagues.

But even the most conservative of this group, Senator Goldwater, generally supported the committee's authority to demand and get information from the executive branch. Staff members suggested that although the committee members might differ on substance, it was clear that most of them agreed Congress must reassert itself as a co-equal branch of Government that could demand and get material from the executive branch.

The committee's 15-month inquiry was not a political boon to its members. Although visions of Watergate publicity may have danced through their heads, by years end most members privately agreed it was hard and unrewarding work.

Yet most stuck it out, paid attention, attended meetings and worked hard. The evidence these men heard from stories of assassinations to tales of illegal wire tapping changed some minds and some political attitudes. Senator Morgan, for instance, a hard-line former Attorney General in North Carolina, was angry and critical of what he learned about Internal Revenue Service snooping and equally skeptical abount many of the activities of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

On the other hand liberal Democrats on the committee privately admitted that the Kennedy Administration was a time in which political use of the intelligence agencies increased and sensitivity to the limitations of Presidential power and covert activity appeared to decrease.

There were no complete political transformations. Senator Goldwater, for instance, is expected to write a long minority objection to the upcoming reports, and Senator Tower has already testified that he does not back the single most important recommendation of the committee —formation of a Senate oversight body to control intelligence.

However, there was universal recognition among the members that some things had gone seriously wrong with the control of intelligence, and that these things must be resolved.

What is troubling to many on Capitol Hill is that the mild, no-confrontation style set by Mr. Church and carried out by William Miller, his committee's chief of staff, and F. A. O. Schwarz 3rd, its counsel, may have permitted the intelligence agencies to shield their deepest problems.

Mr. Schwarz and Mr. Miller, in recent separate interviews, said that they were confident no major area had been left uncovered. But on several topics, particularly covert actions of the Central Intelligence Agency and electronic surveillance, the committee has appeared to have been less than demanding.

The desire to show that Congress can responsibly keep secrets has become an obsession since the contents of a House intelligence committee report was published without authorization in the press. Several Senate committee staff members privately agreed that often the secrecy demanded by the intelligence agencies suited national security less than the bureaucratic security of individuals or agencies that had erred.

Invitation Declined

British Prime Minister James Callaghan did not attend Queen Elizabeth II's 50th birthday party last week, a decision not well received by Britons at large. Newspapers of various political persuasion lambasted Mr. Callaghan for snubbing the Queen. Mr. Callaghan's official explanation was that he was busy reading up on his new job, but unofficially it was said Mr. Callaghan might have felt uncomfortable in the opulence of a royal party while trying to convince trade unions to accept minimal wage increases. A spokesman for the Queen said she understood perfectly the Prime Minister's reasons for not attending.

Resignation Submitted

Gen. Vernon A. Walters, deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, has announced his resignation. General Walters was a key witness during the Senate Watergate hearings, where he told of being instructed by the White House to quash a Federal Bureau of Investigation inquiry into the Watergate affair. One explanation given for General Walters' resignation was that C.I.A. Director George Bush was anxious to "build his own team," and in doing so wanted to purge the agency of any connection with Watergate. The general's friends say he felt it was time to end a 35-year career in the Army. President Ford has nominated E. Henry Knoche, currently C.I.A. associate deputy director, to succeed General Walters.

Treatment Abhorred

Faced with further harassment by tax officials he considers "prestige-seeking poker players," Ingmar Bergman, the film director, has left Sweden. Mr. Bergman's tax troubles began last January, when he was detained for several hours and questioned about money tax officials said he owed. The charges were later found unjustified, but Mr. Bergman suffered a nervous breakdown. Mr. Bergman last week made public his decision to leave Sweden in a searing statement published in a major Swedish newspaper. "The paralyzing feeling of insecurity I have lived with in the last few months must be ended," he said. Swedish Prime Minister Olof Palme responded by appealing to Mr. Bergman to return home.

Supreme Court Upholds Residency Law But City Would Be Unwise to Adopt It

During the Great Depression of the Thirties many cities across the country enacted residency requirements for their public employees. Public employees were required to reside in the cities where they worked so that the tax dollars they received as wages would be spent in the same cities where the taxes were raised.

During World War II and the decades of prosperity that followed, most residency laws were repealed. Those which remained on the books were largely ignored. But in the last few years, a number of cities have once again imposed residency requirements. Other major cities — Washington, D.C. and New York — are moving toward adoption of a residency demand. The reasons given are the same as those given in earlier decades: "We want our tax dollars spent here." In addition to the economic reason there is a racial one. If a residency requirement were imposed in our big cities, many suburbanites, the majority of them white, would be denied city public employment, thereby creating job opportunities for current city residents, many of whom are members of minority groups.

In recent years, residency laws have been challenged by public employees. In a number of states the courts have struck down the residency requirement. But last month, the United States Supreme Court upheld the power of cities to require their employees to live within city limits. The case — McCarthy vs. Philadelphia Civil Service Commission — is bound to have serious consequences.

Francis McCarthy was suspended and dismissed in February 1972 from the Philadelphia Fire Department, where he had served as a fire lieutenant. His dismissal was based on a city ordinance which reads, "Every employee in the Civil Service of the City shall be required to maintain his bona fide residence in the City during the continuance of his employment by the City . . ."

The court record shows "that appellant and his family owned property in both Philadelphia and in Villas, N.J. After certain incidents had occurred in the neighborhood of appellant's Philadelphia property, appellant's wife and 9 of their 10 children moved to the New Jersey property. Appellant and his oldest son continued to live in the house in the City for approximately 10 months until the property was sold, because the house was continually subject to vandalism. Appellant then went to live with his mother in Philadelphia where he remained at least up until the time of his dismissal. It is his mother's home that appellant claims as his in-city residence in that he alleges he resides there while on duty, receives mail there, is registered to vote from that address, and uses that address for various financial purposes.

"The testimony further discloses that appellant, depending on his work schedule, would usually spend two nights a week at his fire station, at least two nights a week at his mother's home, and two to three nights a week in Villas, N.J. Appellant's wife votes in New Jersey and his children attend school there. Appellant does not contest that he was still maintaining a marital relationship with his wife and that he is the sole support for his family."

The Pennsylvania court ruled that McCarthy did not maintain a bona fide residence in Philadelphia. It also rejected McCarthy's appeal on constitutional grounds — that the residence requirement "infringes upon appellant's right to travel and violates the Equal Protection clause of the 14th Amendment . . ." The constitutional question was settled for now when the United States Supreme Court last month let the lower court decision stand.

But the constitutional issue is not the only consideration here. Residency laws, though constitutional, are unwise. A recent editorial in the Wall Street Journal questioned whether cities will derive any economic benefit from such laws. Whenever an employer imposes conditions, the "employee will inevitably demand in exchange higher wages, shorter hours, or other fringes . . . Thus, if this newspaper's publishers insisted that all employees of the Wall Street Journal live in New York City, those who now live in New Jersey would be unhappy over this sudden shift in the terms of trade. They would remain unhappy until the terms of trade were adjusted by a costly combination of wages, hours and other working conditions. And some employees would refuse to live in New York City under any conditions and would resign. The process would shake out the employees with the highest marketability, who have the easiest alternatives, and retain those with low marketability, who will make up the difference by becoming embittered."

Residency laws proposed on racial rather than economic grounds should be questioned, too. For the consequences of such a policy must lead to racial strife rather than harmony and will ultimately prevent minority public employees from moving out of the ghetto to more integrated suburban communities.

The courts have spoken. Cities now have the constitutional right to require residence. But they would be foolish to exercise that right.

The Region

More Whites Leaving, Fewer Blacks Arriving

Since 1970 "white flight" from New York City has increased markedly. At the same time, the influx of blacks to the city has slowed; more blacks are leaving the city than moving into it.

These findings, culled from a United States Census Bureau survey based on city housing data, reflect ongoing demographic trends, but at an altered pace.

For example, the city lost more than 600,000 whites in the period 1970-75, or almost as large a loss as in the entire preceding decade. Some population experts say the increased white loss is due to the continuing postwar exodus of young families to the suburbs (a trend that may have abated somewhat because of the high cost of suburban housing), young people leaving the region because of lessened job opportunities in the northeast, and elderly people moving to the suburbs or out of the region altogether. Because the findings are based on limited data, the economic status or destination of the mobile population is unknown.

In the same period, 1970-75, New York City's black population increased by only 29,000, while its Puerto Rican and other minority population grew substantially, by about 100,000 in each category. As a result the city's population is now 62 percent white (compared with 67 percent in 1970), 22 percent black (compared with 21 percent), 12 percent Puerto Rican (compared with 10 percent), and 4 percent other races (compared with 2 percent). The Bronx now has a predominantly black and Puerto Rican population, and Brooklyn's minority population is more than 40 percent, and growing.

Erosion of the city's tax base has attended white flight to the suburbs and out of the region, but population experts say that the city's enlarged black middle class is a significant mitigating factor. The question for the future is whether middle-class blacks will follow the flight of middle-class whites, and thus aggravate the city's economic deterioration.

The Levittown Financing Case

A lawsuit that could change the historic methods of financing public education in New York State has gone to trial in Mineola, L.I. Two actions are involved. One, concerning suburban and rural districts, attacks the primary reliance for school funds on local property taxes. Critics of the system say it violates the equal protection clause of the state constitution in that wealthier districts are able to provide more financial aid per pupil than poorer ones.

The other action challenges the state's school aid formula for New York and other large cities. It is argued that while the cities may appear to be property-rich, they have special costs, such as those for welfare, health care and transit, that are not considered by the aid formula.

The suit was originally brought by the Levittown, L.I., school district and 25 other districts; the state's four largest cities, New York, Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse, later joined in the action.

In New Jersey and Connecticut, courts have already ruled that reliance on local financing for schools is unconstitutional and have ordered the legislatures to develop more equitable systems.

In New Jersey, the Legislature has enacted a bill containing a new state aid formula designed to insure a "thorough and efficient" education for each pupil, but the measure, which would cost $376 million, has not yet been funded. The Assembly has passed a state income tax bill that would generate almost $1 billion for the new formula and for some local property tax relief; the measure is awaiting action in the Senate.

In Connecticut, the General Assembly has provided $10 million in lottery revenue to the school systems of poorer communities. Most lawmakers conceded that the figure was little more than a token, but felt its approval was a signal to the courts that more substantial assistance would be given when the state's finances improved.

Cunningham's Party Faithful

Though embroiled in legal cases, Patrick Cunningham, the chairman of the New York State Democratic Party, nonetheless has won easy re-election to both his party posts, as state and Bronx county leader.

With the political votes of confidence last week came legal support for Mr. Cunningham's right to keep his jobs. A three-judge Federal panel struck down the state election law that would have automatically ousted him for refusing to waive immunity from prosecution and testify before the grand jury. The court said the law violated the party leader's constitutional right against self-incrimination. The Democratic leader is still fighting to avoid turning over documents subpoenaed by a special grand jury that is investigating whether he was centrally involved in the sale of judgeships in the Bronx.

Mr. Cunningham's legal troubles have made him nearly ineffective as Democratic state chairman and have distanced him from Governor Carey, who chose him for the job.

And they are far from over. Last week, a political associate of Mr. Cunningham, John Whalen, a Bronx district leader, was indicted on charges of destroying records the grand jury had subpoenaed to determine whether or not he and Mr. Cunningham had accepted a bribe from a judge for his seat on the criminal court bench. Mr. Whalen pleaded not guilty.

Three States Struggle Anew Over How to Pay for Schools

By AMY PLUMER

At a time when they would seem least able to respond, the legislatures of New Jersey and Connecticut are under court order to restructure the way they raise and distribute funds to support their public school systems. Both states have enacted new formulas to equalize school-district funding but the legislatures, in a period of serious financial difficulty, have resisted raising the revenues needed to make the formulas work.

New Jersey has been engaged in a battle with its highest court since the court handed down its order in the Robinson v. Cahill decision in March, 1973. The court has now said it will impose its own remedy if the Legislature fails to do so by June 30.

Connecticut, like New Jersey, is resisting the imposition of an income tax, and it also could face a confrontation with its highest court. But this is at least a year away because its lower court decision has just reached the Connecticut Supreme Court.

New York, with the opening of a trial last week in Nassau County State Supreme Court, may also face the possibility of having forced upon it a reform it has long sought and long been incapable of achieving.

Before these states, and many others across the country, is a challenge so fundamental, complex, and potentially costly that it is little wonder reform has been slow and erratic. Even in California, where school finance reform originated following the 1971 Serrano decision, a new system has yet to be enacted. The Serrano decision, in which public school financing based primarily on property wealth was held unconstitutional, is pending before the state's highest court.

At the heart of school finance reform is a set of classic democratic issues constantly subject to redefinition in this country: Is the government providing equal protection to all its citizens, in this case equal educational opportunity to all its school children? Is the method of raising money to support education equitable? Is the method of distributing the money equitable?

The impetus behind the recent reform movement here and across the country is primarily two-fold. The reform was initiated by educational activists who focused on school finance reform as a vehicle for improving the education of poor children. The interests of these reformers—academics and lawyers primarily—coincide with the concerns of a growing number of communities whose property taxes have been increasing rapidly. Reform would achieve both goals—redistribution of spending for education and property tax relief.

In the northeast as in most other states school funding is generally shared by localities and the state. On the average, the state governments carry 40 percent of the burden for school spending; the figure in New York last year. New Jersey and Connecticut, however, have contributed only about 28 and 24 percent respectively in the last few years.

The more a state contributes, and the more equitable its statewide taxation structure, the fewer the inequities, generally, in school financing. However, the tradition of large local support from property taxes is as old as the states and remains firm. The property tax has proved to be the country's most lucrative stable source of revenue. Indeed, in New York, the local property tax is the largest single source of revenue. In 1974-75 it raised almost $7.2 billion for local spending with $3.8 billion devoted to public education. The total yield from the next largest revenue source, the income tax, was $4.4 billion in 1974-75. The property tax is also the last stronghold of local control over spending.

While there are other states that contribute a larger proportion of total funding for education, none contributes as much money, $3 billion, nor requires as high a minimum expenditure per pupil, $1,200, as does New York. Compared to New Jersey and Connecticut, New York is a model. Nevertheless, the spending disparities in the state are significant.

Children in property-poor districts do not have the educational resources available to them that those in wealthier communities have. In addition, to remain competitive, property-poor districts must tax themselves at higher rates which they can less afford. For example, in the 1975-76 school year, Levittown, the originator of the suit, had about $25,000 in real property value behind each pupil while Great Neck had more than $100,000. Taxing itself at a rate of $27.86 per $1,000 of full valuation, and in combination with state aid, Levittown's operating expenses per pupil were $1,894. Great Neck, with state aid and with a tax rate of $23.85 per $1,000 was able to spend $3,165.

Intervening Cities

Intervening in the New York case are four of the state's largest cities, New York, Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse. Theirs is the first legal case in the country to deal with problems in school finance suffered exclusively by cities. Their problem with the property tax relates to its use as an index of local wealth. Because of their industrial and commercial properties the cities look wealthy. Accordingly, the state distributes less money to them than they believe is their due.

New York's response to the broad suit, says Amy Juviler, the assistant attorney general representing the state, will primarily focus on yet another constitutional issue, whether it is appropriate for the courts to act on the suit at all. Mrs. Juviler argues that the distribution of aid to schools as well as to other public services is exclusively a legislative function and not within judicial jurisdiction. In addition she contends that the New York system is adequate and indeed superior to that in all other states both in the aid offered and the method of distribution.

The wealthier suburban communities probably would not lose any state aid if the present program were changed. The direct diversion of funds from their communities to poorer ones is considered politically untenable. The usual route toward equalization is to raise new statewide revenues and channel them to poor districts or needful students. This process, called "equalizing up," is very costly, and that is what is jeopardizing the reform movement in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut. All three states are struggling with budget deficits and the last action they want to take is to raise taxes.

Careers in Public Service

A two-year full-time program leading to the MASTER OF ARTS DEGREE in URBAN AFFAIRS AND POLICY ANALYSIS

Graduates of this program serve in key policy planning and analysis positions in city, state, and federal government, major community agencies, and research organizations in the United States and Canada.

The program's faculty represents a unique blend of academic achievement and practical exposure to the problems of government at the federal, state and local levels. The courses and laboratories in the program are organized into five areas. Three are related to specific fields of knowledge—urban environments, policy-making, and programs and services. Two are skills oriented—analytic skill and problem solving.

A key feature of the program is a series of problem-solving laboratories in which teams of students work on actual major policy problems currently facing policymakers in urban government. Student laboratory reports have included recommendations for policy on urban neighborhood health services to a congressman; a four-year economic development strategy for New York City's Economic Development Administrator; a strategy for the improvement of work in America with the President's Commission on Productivity.

Work internships add to the students' skills. As part of the program, students have worked for a variety of governmental or quasi-governmental agencies, including the Brookings Institution; Tri-State Metropolitan Planning Board; U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare Regional Office; and various departments and bureaus of the City of New York (including the Mayor's Office).

Scholarships and fellowships are available for qualified applicants. Registration is being accepted now for the 1976 academic year. For bulletin, application and financial aid information, call (212) 741-7910 or mail the coupon.

You probably don't even know what Vivisection is.

A lot of people still don't know what Vivisection is, and what it's all about. What it's all about isn't very pretty. It's about painful and cruel experiments on millions of living animals - dogs, cats, rabbits and others. An estimated 70% of these experiments are performed not for medical research but for cosmetic testing and other non medical purposes. It's also about Billions of Dollars of Tax Payers' Money spent on senseless experiments that do nothing to benefit mankind. Finally it's about morality. We'd like to tell you more about it.

Majoring In Folklore

Folklore has attained the status of a proper university course of study, and is gaining in popularity on campuses around the country.

Students are drawn to folklore because they find in it human values and an opportunity to explore the cultural traditions of ordinary people, according to Richard M. Dorson, director of the Indiana University Folklore Institute. He says the subject's appeal has been enhanced by the strong interest today in ethnics, blacks, Chicanos, Indians and other "left-out" groups in American history.

No overall enrollment figures are kept, but several hundred colleges now offer courses in folklore. At least a dozen have master's programs, and three universities—Indiana, Pennsylvania and Texas — offer doctoral degrees. Indiana annually enrolls at least 2,500 students in its courses at all levels.

At the undergraduate level, introductory courses survey the folklore genres, such as myths, legends, ballads and popular tales; and advanced courses deal in depth with a particular genre or culture area. At the graduate level, students do field research and interpret the folklore perspective in relation to other disciplines such as literature and anthropology.

Approach to Life After Death

The possibility of life after death, long the province of theologians and psychics, is now prompting scientific inquiries as a result of new studies of the dying process.

A new direction for these inquiries has resulted from advances in resuscitative techniques that make it possible to revive people who have experienced a form of clinically defined death. Most of the research, limited so far, has involved the interviewing of these people about their experiences for possible clues to a world beyond.

Impetus for the inquiries has come mainly from the studies of Dr. Elisabeth Kubler-Ross, a leader in the field of thanatology who has talked with many persons revived from clinically defined death. She says her research has convinced her that there is life after death.

Dr. Kubler-Ross, a psychiatrist, describes three components common to the death experiences: a sense of the soul floating out of the body, feelings of peace and wholeness, and a meeting with someone who had previously died.

The researchers do not contend that their findings have been proved scientifically, but that they open some intriguing possibilities concerning such matters as the clinical definition of death and whether the nature of the death experiences is of this world or otherworldly.

The major religions take different views of life after death. Christianity teaches that there is some form of afterlife, but there is no clear definition of it. Judaism has no prevailing belief in life after death. Islam teaches that life on earth is a period of testing and preparation for eternal life that begins with death, either in heaven or in hell. Buddhists and Hindus believe in forms of reincarnation and that a person's behavior will influence his future well-being.

Energy Conservation

In a modification of a policy statement only 10 months old, the Energy Research and Development administration has announced that it will raise the conservation of energy to a priority equal to that of finding new energy sources. The agency's comprehensive energy development plan submitted to Congress last June subordinated conservation to nuclear development and to such processes as the conversion of coal and oil shale to liquid and gaseous fuels.

Since then, Congress has shown unwillingness to underwrite the development of new energy sources, and industry has emphasized the obstacles lying in the way of new technologies. Officials in the agency believe its standing with Congress would be improved by a show of results from its efforts, and such results are more likely to be attained quickly by conservation than by development of new energy sources.

The new report drew attention to "a host of more efficient technologies" for buildings, transportation and industry that are not used because they and their benefits are not widely enough known. These range from systems to recover wasted industrial heat to putting functional windows in office buildings and streamlining trains.

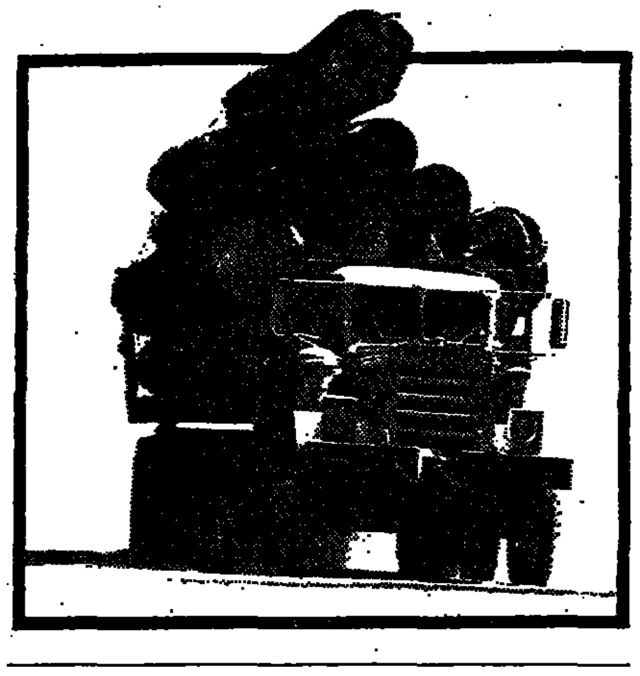
Bioconversion, Or, Tapping Energy That Plants Store Up



By DENIS HAYES

One of the most promising scientific responses to the energy crisis has been an increased interest in ways of harnessing directly the sunlight captured by living plants—energy equal, according to one estimate, to twenty times the current present level of fuel consumption worldwide. The fossil fuels—coal, oil and natural gas—are the remains of long-dead plants, and the combustible elements in them were extracted from air and water by solar-powered photosynthesis some 350 million years ago.

At present, it is still cheaper in the industrialized countries to consume prehistoric solar energy than to capture the current crop. Coal and oil are easier to store, transport and utilize for most current applications than is, for example, firewood. But as the easily available high-grade fossil fuels are consumed, the cost of finding and extracting what is left rises. Trees, however, grow on top of the ground, where they are easy to find, and though conservation efforts like those recently advocated by the United States Energy Research and Development Administration may slow the depletion of fossil fuels, it is only a matter of time before the cost of heating with oil rises to match the cost of heating with firewood.

The many processes employed to use plant energy can be loosely categorized as bioconversion. All have in common the conversion of solar energy captured by plants directly to energy useful by man without going through the fossil stage. Some forms of bioconversion are much older than industrial society. A century ago, the United States obtained 90 percent of its commercial energy from wood, and for nine-tenths of the people in most poor countries wood and charcoal remain the primary sources of energy today.

Wood can also play a part in more sophisticated industrial technologies. The Weyerhaeuser Corporation has announced a $75 million program to convert its paper mills to fuel made from otherwise wasted wood. Independent studies by the Mitre Corporation, Stanford University and the University of Georgia have recommended the establishment of forest "plantations" in the United States to fuel electrical generating facilities.

A number of other energy crops, especially fast-growing plants that fix solar energy efficiently, are being examined by advocates of bioconversion. Bagasse (sugar-cane residues) has long been used to generate electricity in the Philippines. Corn stalks and spoiled grain are being considered as potential sources of alcohol fuel in the American midwest. Other plants being examined as possible energy corps include giant ocean kelp, water hyacinths and algae.

Organic wastes are also subject to bioconversion by many different processes. The easiest is to burn the wastes to produce electricity. The most ambitious such scheme in the United States is Connecticut's $250 million, ten-plant project to convert 84 percent of the state's solid waste into 10 percent of the state's electricity.

Another waste-conversion process, anaerobic digestion, involves feeding sewage, feed-lot wastes, agricultural residues, or other organic debris to bacteria. Under carefully controlled conditions of temperature and acidity, these bacteria produce natural gas and the residue is a rich fertilizer. Further processing can change the gas into liquid methanol for easy transport and storage. Using such technologies, American farmers could make more fuel from field wastes each year than they use. India now has thousands of small generators that convert dung into methane scattered throug its countryside. Bio-Gas of Colorado has built a $4 million methane plant next to the feedlots in Greeley, Colorado, and a Chicago gas company has contracted for 100 million cubic feet a month of gas from this process.

Another process, called pyrolysis, decomposes organic matter by baking it in the absence of oxygen. The gaseous, liquid and solid products are all good fuels. Baltimore's pyrolysis plant, which now heats much of its downtown business district, can convert 1000 tons of garbage a day.

Bioconversion, like all other sources of energy, has its detractors. Some critics object that a growing commitment to the extraction of energy from garbage could cause society to develop a vested interest in unnecessary waste. Some analysts have begun to examine the net energy flows of energy plantations, and worry that such facilities might require almost as much energy for fertilizer and harvesting as they will produce. Still others fear that energy crops could compete with food crops for scarce agricultural land.

The long-term environmental consequences of large-scale bioconversion are not yet well understood. If the system is operated wisely, the environmental effects should be much less damaging than those associated with fossil fuels. Unlike oil and coal, bioconversion takes as much carbon dioxide out of the atmosphere each year as it emits.

Bioconversion holds immediate promise in most third-world countries. It can be cheap and simple; some forms can be built by local labor from indigenous materials; and it is not dependent upon oil sheiks or uranium barons.

In the developed world also, bioconversion offers considerable hope. Because it produces liquid and gaseous fuels, it is an attractive substitute for the energy sources the industrial nations are running out of: oil and natural gas. The United States could produce about 7 percent of its current energy budget—twice as much fuel as the Alaskan pipeline will deliver—from organic matter currently thrown away. With energy plantations and ocean farms, the yield could be several times higher.

Moment of Truth

In modern American politics, there is a dynamic relationship between opinion polls and primary elections. A Presidential hopeful who is relatively unknown has a low standing in the opinion polls because immediate name recognition is a critical factor. If he wins the early primaries, he radically improves his standing in the polls. Money and support then flow to him, making it easier for him to win subsequent primaries and endowing him with that useful intangible called momentum.

Former Gov. Jimmy Carter has demonstrated the working of this relationship in the current campaign. Having won six of the first eight primaries, he has achieved the steepest rise in the Gallup Poll since Wendell Willkie came from nowhere to win the Republican nomination in 1940. He now runs neck-and-neck with Senator Hubert H. Humphrey as the preferred candidate among Democrats.

But poll ratings are rarely static for long. As he has become better known and his record has been subjected to more searching criticism, Mr. Carter has become the target of increased negative feelings as well. He is, in a word, becoming "controversial." That was inevitable. Some of his rivals such as Representative Morris K. Udall would undoubtedly be glad to trade their lack of name recognition among voters for Mr. Carter's high visibility even with its attendant controversy.

On Tuesday, the Pennsylvania primary will test whether Mr. Carter can translate his standing in the polls into votes and elected delegates. He is opposed by a formidable coalition of major labor unions, Gov. Milton Shapp's personal organization, Mayor Frank Rizzo's Philadelphia machine, and assorted county organizations. This coalition is backing Senator Henry M. Jackson who thus far has handed Mr. Carter his only two defeats—in Massachusetts and New York. In both those states, Mr. Carter ran fourth.

Pennsylvania in its economic and demographic makeup has many similarities to the other Northeastern states. But Mr. Carter suffered those earlier defeats before he had gained such strength in the opinion polls, and in those states he made less than a maximum effort. He is making that maximum effort in Pennsylvania.

Moreover, the money famine induced by Congress's failure to enact a timely revision of the campaign finance law has hurt Governor Carter least of the three active Democratic candidates. Because his poll standings give him the look of a winner, he has found it easier to raise funds for a radio and television advertising campaign in Pennsylvania than either Mr. Jackson or Mr. Udall. This is the old story of success breeding success.

Looming phantasmagorically over the primary scene is that extremely active nonparticipant, Senator Humphrey. Many labor and political leaders are supporting Mr. Jackson and, to a lesser extent, Mr. Udall because they really want to open the way to a Humphrey nomination. Many voters unquestionably share their enthusiasm. But experience suggests that a candidate whose own name is not on the ballot rarely does well seeking support through proxy candidates, favorite-son candidates, or uncommitted slates.

Pennsylvania could produce an ambiguous result. Governor Carter could win the statewide popularity contest, while the union and party organizations deliver a majority of delegates to Senator Jackson, since the delegates are elected separately on a district-by-district basis. But voters are often more sophisticated than politicians suspect. If Mr. Carter's popularity in Pennsylvania is as great as the polls suggest, the voters there will no doubt find his supporters on the delegate side of the ballot. The moment of truth for the Democratic rivals may be at hand.

On-Shore Planning

A consortium of oil companies has started to test New England's outer continental shelf for indications of oil in sufficient quantity to warrant bidding for the Federally owned tracts. It is just possible that this preliminary drilling will reveal prospects too scant to justify production drilling at the risk of severely damaging one of the richest resort and fishing areas of the country. It is equally possible that it will promise an appreciable return, as similar testing has indicated in the Baltimore Canyon off New Jersey.

Each step that paves the way to possible offshore drilling on a massive scale makes it more urgent that the states and local communities be granted a significant share in the decision-making process. Yet there is little chance of that unless a bill reported by a House committee a few days ago is passed, squared with a comparable Senate bill and signed into law by a President who has so far shown no interest in it.

Among the constructive provisions of this bill, which is being managed by Representative John M. Murphy of New York, is a section that would give states the substantial role they should have. The normal advantage of Federal action over state and local action in environmental matters is not present in this case. The Federal interest is to exploit an energy source found beyond the three-mile limit, which is in its jurisdiction. The interest of the state governments—and their responsibility—is to see that neither the Federal government nor the oil companies exploit that energy source at the expense of the social, economic or environmental welfare of the states' coastal areas.

However clean and efficient the off-shore operations of the oil companies may be, their impact on shore will be far-reaching. Unless the impact of pipelines, rig assembly plants and shore installations is carefully and skillfully planned, it can be devastating. If the states are to prevent such devastation, as they have a duty to do, they must be full partners in any off-shore drilling project. It is for Federal, state and local governments, acting together, not special interests—whether oil producers or local chambers of commerce—to balance the need for energy and immediate jobs against necessary protection for fishing and resort industries, preservation of wetlands and protection of the quality of life along the coast.

This would be true no matter what the attitude of the Federal Administration. It is doubly true in the case of an Administration that is zealous in the pursuit of new energy sources, only mildly concerned about improving the national environment—and not given to coherent planning for either.

New Blow at I.L.O.

Just when it appeared that relations between the United States and the International Labor Organization were as rough as they could get, the House of Representatives proved that it could make them rockier still.

By voting to kill the $25 million appropriation that represents this country's share of the I.L.O. budget for an eighteen-month period, the House has jeopardized the strategy devised by the Ford Administration—in cooperation with American industry and labor—to curb Soviet and third-world "politicization" of the agency.

That strategy, always a dubious one, grew out of a long accumulation of grievances, culminating in the I.L.O.'s decision last June to grant "observer" status to the Palestine Liberation Organization. The Administration served two-year notice last fall that the United States intended to withdraw unless the I.L.O. took steps toward internal reform.

However, the White House emphasized that its hope was to achieve positive change, not to get out. It added that all of this country's budget assessments would be fully met, as is required by international law. George Meany, A.F.L.-C.I.O. president, a perennial critic of the world organization, endorsed this approach.

Both President Ford and Mr. Meany have sought ever since to demonstrate their sincerity of purpose, the President by designating a special emissary—Laurence H. Silberman, Ambassador to Yugoslavia and a former Under Secretary of Labor—to seek allies in West Europe. The A.F.L.-C.I.O. chief, for his part, has sent letters to unions in Asia, Africa and Latin America appealing for support.

Whatever chance there might be for affirmative responses at the I.L.O. annual conference in Geneva in June will be severely undercut by the House's surprise decision to kill the appropriation. The Senate will be well advised to restore the $25 million when it reconvenes after the Easter recess.

Rail Merger

In the wake of Conrail, the parent companies of the Southern Railroad and the Missouri Pacific—two of the nation's more profitable railroads—have announced that they are studying what in effect would be a merger, following the creation of a new corporate entity.

A new and more closely integrated rail system is a prime aim of the Federal Department of Transportation and of the new Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act. One move in that direction was the fusion at the beginning of this month of the Penn Central and other bankrupt Northeastern railroads into a regional network heavily backed by Federal funds. The Southern-Mopac exploration contemplates no such massive subsidy.

The new rail law requires the I.C.C. to decide on mergers within 31 months. That should allow plenty of time for careful study by the Department of Transportation and the I.C.C. on whether this particular merger is necessary or desirable. Neither condition can be taken for granted. The Penn Central—the biggest rail merger in history and, not long afterward, the biggest bankruptcy—remains as a warning against clumsy combinations.

On their face, the Southern and Missouri Pacific—operating in different parts of the country, with connecting points at New Orleans, Memphis and St. Louis—appear to contain the elements for a more natural and efficient tie-up than did the more sprawling and overlapping Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York Central. However, if a solid realignment of the nation's railroads is to occur, it is crucial that the first major merger of this new era make sense in terms of better public service.

The Dipper

Regardless of the weather, the stars point the season. Go out now and look up and to the north in midevening. The moonless sky is filled with stars that still glitter with winter's brilliance, but the Big Dipper hangs high overhead, higher than at any other time of the year, well above Polaris and with its bowl inverted, no longer a Winter Dipper.

Astronomers have called this constellation Ursa Major, the Big Bear, for thousands of years, but in Homer's time it was also known as Maxama, the Wagon. A little later the Romans called it Septentriones, the Seven Plowing Oxen. Both these names went to England with the Roman occupation, and for a long time the constellation was called the Wagon of Charlemagne, or Charles' Wain. Then it became The Plow.

Ancient Arabs saw the constellation as a coffin followed by a funeral procession. But Arab names left little imprint on popular astronomy in the West. Among American Indian legends was one that made the constellation a bear followed by three hunters, one so sure of success that he carried a cooking pot on his shoulder. Sharp eyes can see the pot, a small star close by the middle star in the Dipper's handle.

But we still prefer it as The Dipper, an old-fashioned dipper filled with new flowers and new leaves and exuberant birdsong, and now spilling this springtime generosity over the whole northern hemisphere.

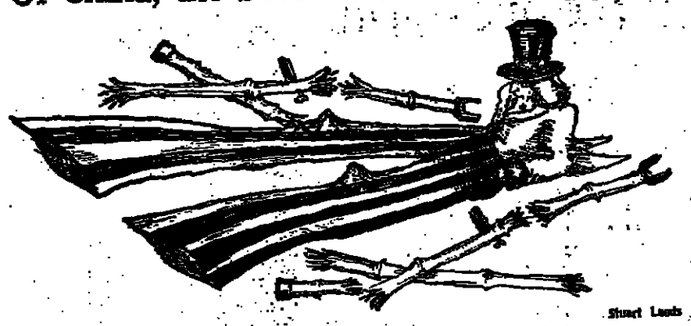
Of China, the Soviet Union and American Will



Stuart Leeds

To the Editor:

The eclipse of Teng Hsiao-ping must be laid at the door of Washington. The failure of the Ford-Kissinger mission undermined his prestige, and the resulting confusion threatens to undo the legacy of a peaceful transition bequeathed by Chou En-lai. Mao's successors, dismayed by our failure to fulfill the expectations of the Shanghai Communiqué and frightened by the precipitate American retreat and weakness, may be compelled to seek an accommodation with Russia. Thus, once more, we are doing Russia's work of destabilizing China.

Our disastrous Russian policy is the obverse of our disastrous China policy. Our stated objective is "stabilization"; Russia's, destabilization. We do everything to legitimate the Russian empire; they do everything to undermine the West. The Sonnenfeldt memo is the "inside" expression of our policy, while the Helsinki Agreement ("what's mine is mine, what's yours we'll argue about") is already being turned against us. This asymmetric relationship goes under the euphemism of "détente." In the thirties, it had another name.

For the first time since Peter the Great, Russia's military doctrine has been reversed from the strategic defensive to the offensive. Its armed forces are being prepared and trained in the spirit of the super-blitzkrieg. Its massive militarization will soon reach the point of no return. Even the Western Communists and India, frightened by American weakness and Russian expansionism which threaten the balance of power on which world peace depends, are dramatically shifting gears.

Behind the Kissinger macho facade lurks a profound pessimism leading to capitulation before the "inevitable." As our nation approaches its Bicentennial, it is being led from hope to despair. But history is an open road, and the unfinished American story is still a beacon for the world. Everything depends on our will. On the clock of history, it is five minutes to midnight.

A New Canal Treaty

To the Editor:

Instead of quivering every time Ronald Reagan mentions the Panama Canal Treaty, President Ford could show a little bit of courage and leadership and faith in the intelligence of the American electorate and explain in more than one sentence why a new treaty with Panama is necessary. [Editorial April 17.]

Such an explanation should go beyond Ron Nessen's "clarifying" but vacuous statement that the U.S. could only accept a treaty which preserved American rights and interests. It's the President's responsibility to articulate publicly America's interests — which are clearly an open, efficient and neutral Panama Canal and good relations with Latin America and the developing world—and explain why a new treaty is the only way to guarantee that these objectives are obtained.

It's not necessary for President Ford to go into the details of the treaty; all he need do is present a rationale for the Joint Statement of Principles signed by the U.S. and Panama on Feb. 8, 1974. It is this statement and not the details of a treaty which Ronald Reagan is attacking. Anyone with the most superficial knowledge of the history of the original 1903 treaty knows that we didn't buy the canal, as Reagan maintains. We didn't pay for it; it is not sovereign U.S. territory, and it is therefore irrelevant to talk of giving it away.

President Ford has complained that Reagan is trying to make "a campaign issue" out of the Canal treaty, but rather than an excuse for not responding, Reagan's remarks should provide the motive for a good detailed Presidential defense of the treaty.

Historic $2 Bill

To the Editor:

No wonder President Ford looked so happy as Secretary of the Treasury Simon gave him the first $2 bill off the printing press — with a serial number on the bill to prove this fact—and President Ford handed over two $1 bills in return. Years from now this bill will command a handsome price in collectors' circles, and it surely should not be allowed to remain in President Ford's personal possession but be placed in the appropriate national archives.

Fixing Blame for the Malpractice Mess

To the Editor:

The doctors of New York State published a twelve-page advertising supplement in The Times of April 11. They went to great expense and length to blame almost everyone for the malpractice situation that now exists. The single exception is the doctors themselves.

The president of the State Medical Society mentions that malpractice insurance abroad costs only $100 a year. But what he significantly fails to mention is the real reason the premiums are nominal: Peer Review in England, for example, could less euphemistically be termed Peer Inquisition. There, should there be any untoward result from medical treatment or surgery, the responsible physician is required to appear before a board made up of members in his own field of specialization. He is exhaustively interrogated.

For example, if a surgical case results in a side effect not usually found, the surgeon is most closely examined as to each step he took—or failed to take—in the course of the operation under review. And should he fail fully to justify his techniques and procedures or fail fully to establish that he took all precautions to avoid the untoward result, he suffers a stigma far worse than high malpractice premiums: He is professionally ostracized.

The attendant result is that he no longer has reputable hospital appointments open to him, he no longer gets referrals from general practitioners or others—he no longer has a practice.

Compare this stringent self-policing with the recent disclosure that two drug-addicted brothers, physicians on the staff of a large New York hospital, were not only permitted to practice but were shielded by their colleagues.

Despite the verbose and lacrimal advertising supplement, not one sentence was devoted to two salient matters of which the public are wholly unaware. First, if the plaintiff in a malpractice suit (as in any suit) fails to adduce adequate proof to justify a jury finding in his behalf, the judge is required by law to dismiss the action, and it never even reaches the jury. Secondly, if the court believes that the jury verdict is excessive, he has both the power and the duty to set it aside.

It ill behooves the president of the State Medical Society to cry of the society's lack of success in gaining "requested legislation for greater input into the disciplinary process" (gobbledygook of Madison Avenue, where, no doubt, it was composed). The Hippocratic oath has not been repealed; it just hasn't been effectively applied and enforced.

Seoul's Repression

By Richard A. Falk

PRINCETON, N. J.—Coming at a time of relative calm between North and South Korea, President Park Chung Hee's recent moves against prominent political moderates and civic leaders cannot fairly be attributed to any alleged security threat. What, then, is the real source of Mr. Park's anxiety?

South Korea is widely heralded as an "economic miracle" second only to Brazil; virtually the entire political spectrum is committed to defending the country against possible attack from North Korea; and critics of the regime (unlike their past South Vietnamese counterparts) do not even seek an American military withdrawal.

In my judgment, South Korea's strategy of economic development accounts for the new round of repression. In a resource-poor third-world country, economic miracles (as measured by the rising gross national product) require substantial foreign investment, loans from outside, and capital assistance, which can be attracted to such a setting only by assured and short-term profits.

South Korea's economic attractiveness is peculiarly dependent upon outrageously low wages, large-scale corruption in the bureaucracy, staggering foreign economic debts and — concomitantly — on progressively harsher governmental repression.

The effort to sustain "growth" when the cost of oil and other imports was rising and the demand for exports was declining produced a trade deficit of $4 billion in 1974-75. The Korean Government, falsely assuming that its difficulties were temporary and rightly regarding its attractiveness to foreign investors as a factor of its "miraculous" growth, has borrowed almost $4 billion in the last three years, thereby increasing its external debt to $5.9 billion, a very high figure for a country of Korea's economic scale.

At the core of domestic opposition to Mr. Park is the dual conviction that these economic policies are deepening existing inequities and undermining national autonomy by leaving South Korea's economic fate at the mercy of foreign investors and bankers. In these circumstances, those who criticize the role of Japanese and American financial operations are understandably labeled enemies of the state and treated as "Communist sympathizers."

Labor agitation, not Communist subversion, is perceived as the real threat to internal security. Students, religious leaders and cultural figures deliberately provoke such agitation to protest injustice, corruption and further erosion of independence.

David Burnett/Contact

In short, South Korea's economic policies help explain why these moderate groups bear the brunt of governmental repression, and why Mr. Park tries so hard to mislead both Korean and American public opinion about the nature of the opposition's demands and political orientation.

Up to now, the serious opposition, led by the courageous and respected Kim Dae Jung (among those recently detained and charged with political crimes), has been moderate, nonviolent, anti-North Korean, anti-Communist and pro-American.

When I interviewed Mr. Kim in Seoul in September, he explained that Mr. Park's brutal measures of governance, far from increasing the nation's security, have instead provoked widespread opposition, thereby making South Korean society increasingly vulnerable to infiltration from North Korea and rapidly leaving the steadily growing opposition little alternative but armed insurrection. Mr. Park's accusations of a subversive Communist-inspired opposition would thus become a self-fulfilling prophecy.

Mr. Kim is also convinced that Mr. Park's anti-Communist crusade adversely affects broader issues of peace and even the possibility of Korean reunification. Mr. Park's domestic governing strategy requires maintaining a sense of tension by exaggerating the dangers from North Korea, but such tactics are obviously incompatible with negotiations and normalization.

In effect, then, the democratic opposition to Mr. Park rests part of its case, too, on the security issue—but through the more appealing and persuasive ideal of building a genuinely strong country that the South Korean people will freely support.

Given Seoul's dependence on foreign loans and multinational corporate investment, United States policy-makers have powerful leverage.

They can follow the path of least resistance, as they did in South Vietnam, by lending their support to political repression and economic policies that bring profits for the few and misery for the many. Or they can condition further economic and military assistance upon minimal respect for human rights and political independence.

South Korea provides our foreign-policy-makers with precisely the challenge and opportunity they need to demonstrate that they have learned the principal lesson of Vietnam.

Springtime for Portugal

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS—The Sunday balloting in Portugal is historically unique. It represents the first time a country that was, if briefly, on the very brink of Communist dictatorship has been able to break away, establish a workable provisional government, and vote. These are the first free legislative elections the Portuguese have held in fifty years.

International symbolism is involved as much as direct effects on the little Iberian nation. Among other things, it is expected that vestigial separatist movements in the Azores and Madeira will die away once it is officially confirmed that the Marxist threat has vanished.

Thus, two years after a military coup d'état overthrew the dictatorship originated by Salazar, Portugal hopes to become a stable, democratic state, increasingly integrated into Europe and firmly tied to the West.

Should this occur, the implications to certain Portuguese allies are plain. Already Iceland has shown it could include Communist ministers in its Cabinet and then, despite the nearby Soviet fleet, drop them. Will there be a lesson for Italy in Portugal's experiment? That is the $64 billion question nobody can answer.

Nor is it clear what political pattern will dominate the Portuguese kaleidoscope after tomorrow. On the eve of the vote, trends have been moving steadily rightward. Moreover a curious indifference to the excitements of democracy has strangely supervened. Thus many people may ignore the chance to express their opinion.

This is not wholly unfamiliar to the Portuguese character. Last month the Prime Minister of the outgoing Cabinet, Adm. José Pinheiro de Azevedo, told me: "The Portuguese people know what they don't want but they find it difficult to indicate what they do want. That makes it difficult for politics to work here since the people never seem to know precisely what they hope for."

Still, it seems a sound guess that the Socialist Party of Mario Soares remains barely ahead of the center-left Liberal Popular Democrats and well in front of the conservative Social Democratic Center with the minority Communists even further behind than last year in the vote for a constituent assembly.

That they know how much they lag was inferentially confirmed Wednesday when Alvaro Cunhal, their boss, who used to sneer at the Socialists, called for a Communist-Socialist coalition to rule Portugal. Mr. Soares, however, condemns Mr. Cunhal as "just a slave of Moscow." He observed to me in Lisbon: "Their tactic right now is to try and glue themselves to us for electoral purposes."

Almost inevitably no single one of the three leading parties will obtain sufficient backing in the new legislature to form a government alone. And the most confident contenders, the Socialists, claim they won't enter a coalition. Unless there is some give this could produce subsequent trouble.

May is therefore likely to be a troubled month for the fledgling Portuguese democracy. If there is a deadlock and no clear victory there might, indeed, be violence. This depends basically on who wins and by how much and on what kind of regime can eventually be patched up.

The system has been racked by troubles since the stultifying dictatorship collapsed. As Admiral Azevedo says: "It keeps swinging from right to left and back, never stopping in the center." Defeat in elections does not come gracefully to Latin politicians yet it is hard to imagine that to the loser belong the spoils.

Meanwhile, as the democratic formula begins its long-term test, certain lessons should be pondered. To start with, the change has been produced by the Portuguese themselves: practical people, aware of the importance to their future of geographic and commercial links to the West, and more psychologically suited to a system of compromising opposite views than are their Spanish neighbors.

Secondly, the armed forces, who staged the 1974 coup and who have since been enjoying dizzy political games, now seem reconciled to getting back to their barracks. Although the two men most often mentioned as Presidential candidates—to be nominated by the civilian parties—for follow-up elections in June, are an admiral (Azevedo) and a general (António Ramalho Eanes), they are considered in terms of a "de Gaulle," not a "Franco."

Finally, the United States played a distinctly subsidiary role in helping revive democracy in Lisbon. The United States Ambassador was brilliant and effective although the Washington Administration was initially overcautious. Offstage the influence of Western Europe—above all its Socialist parties—proved critical. Perhaps this could be a forerunner of similar behind-the-scenes European diplomacy in Rome.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Jimmy Carter's Appeal

By Tom Wicker

HARRISBURG, Pa., April 23—Anybody who still doesn't understand the nearly mystical appeal of Jimmy Carter to the American people in 1976 should have been at the West Shore Senior Citizens Center in New Cumberland Township near here today. To a packed house of several hundred Pennsylvanians in the center's recreation hall, Mr. Carter spoke of three recent national traumas as follows:

Vietnam: "We killed hundreds of thousands of Vietnamese—little babies and children and mothers and fathers. But we never really wanted to fight over there, without quite knowing why. The people were not part of the process."

Watergate: "We trusted [Richard Nixon] in 1972. . . . Watergate came about because we were not told the truth. We were not part of what the Government became."

C.I.A. Activities: "I wouldn't plot murder. You wouldn't plot murder. So why should our Government plot murder?"

Mr. Carter's audience was rapt throughout these formulations, except for a few heads nodding sagely. The proverbial pin might have been heard dropping, as the candidate told in all these ways that there was nothing wrong with them, that he understood what he called the "hunger in this country to get back those precious things we've lost."

Here, as in New Hampshire last winter and all the primaries between, Mr. Carter, more effectively than anyone else in the race, is telling the people what they seem desperately to want to hear—that they are not to blame for what has been happening in the country, that what is really needed is "a government as good as our people."

And not many politicians ever made a basically political appeal with more fervor than Mr. Carter did when he suggested to a youthful audience in the Albright College chapel in Reading that each might make a hundred phone calls asking people to vote — not necessarily for him—in the primary Tuesday.

"Don't sit back or be disillusioned or whine or complain, or give up on our country," he implored the young people.

"We've got a great country. It needs you and you need a good government." What Mr. Carter needs, however, is a big turnout Tuesday to help him overcome the labor vote union leaders have pledged to deliver for Senator Scoop Jackson.

None of this is meant to support the charge that Mr. Carter ducks or straddles the issues, or shifts his positions with the political weather. Mr. Carter's policy statements—like the one just issued on economic policy—are as specific as anyone's, and more thoughtful than most. A man who said in the New York primary that he did not favor most forms of Federal aid to New York City, and who took on George Wallace in North Florida and eastern North Carolina as well as in Harlem, ought to have persuaded critics at least of his political boldness.

But the Carter campaign, more than any other, is based on the premise that, this year, issues matter less than the American psyche—that the way to win is to persuade the people that "precious things" like truth and brotherhood and idealism and pride in the country can yet be regained. Mr. Carter seems to have made the restoration of the people's faith in themselves his primary campaign strategy.

The record so far suggests how politically astute that judgment was. But there are troublesome questions about it, nonetheless. Is it really true, for example, that "a government as good as the people" would have avoided Vietnam and Watergate? Did cold-war fever and public fear of unrest and dissent have nothing to do with them?

IN THE NATION

A political campaign may not be the time to call for sacrifice, or even the long view as against immediate interest, but such a time would surely come for a Carter in the White House. It seems reasonable to ask whether he would not then find it harder to overcome the greed and prejudice and passion and indifference of a people he has so assured of their essential righteousness.

And although Mr. Carter is certainly not saying there are no real problems—quite the opposite—his emphasis on the basic goodness of the country may not lay the best groundwork for the real political and economic struggles that await a leader who sets out to do something more than cosmetic about those problems. Will the Carter campaign engender a public mood of struggle and concern, or one of complacency?

Finally, could Jimmy Carter or anyone keep his end of the bargain, if elected, and never lie, never mislead, never betray the people's confidence, while restoring the "precious things" of the American myth? The question reflects Mr. Carter's great appeal to so many; but merely to ask it explains the skepticism he evokes in so many others.

Derby Week: When the South Rises

By STEVE CADY

Special to The New York Times

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 24—Realists accused being horse lovers have argued indignantly that a horse lover is a horse who is in love with another horse. This may be true during most of the year. But not during the week leading up to the first Saturday in May. That's the day when illusion becomes a reality for millions of instant horse lovers, the day the tulips stand tall and the band plays "My Old Kentucky Home" at Churchill Downs.

Even during the offseason, when no horses run and no pari-mutuel machines are running, 200,000 tourists visit the site just out of curiosity. "They like to look around," says Lynn Stone, the track's president, "and get the free guided tour and say, 'This is the place, this is where it happens.'"

What happens at Churchill Downs on the first Saturday of every May, as anyone with an ounce of sentiment knows, is the Kentucky Derby, and today, as the track opened its spring meeting and Louisville began cranking up for Derby Week, the horse lovers and fun lovers were waiting for "it" to happen for the 102d time.

When it does, no more than 10 horses are expected to come out of the starting gate in the 1¼-mile race for 3-year-olds. With Honest Pleasure and Bold Forbes throwing their weight around, next Saturday's Derby has taken on the aspect of a heavyweight title fight.

The two colts, both of them grandsons of the late Bold Ruler, took different routes to get here. Both have been overpowering—Honest Pleasure in Florida and Kentucky, Bold Forbes in New York. Both have smashed stakes records, and both are ready for their showdown in the first part of racing's triple crown series.

So are the racing fans and so, too, are the once-a-year horse enthusiasts who don't know a fetlock from a furlong. For many Americans, the racing season begins and ends with the Kentucky Derby.

Other sports spectaculars last much longer. A baseball World Series can drag on for a week or more, a football Super Bowl or an Indianapolis 500 for hours. But there is never anything tedious about America's favorite horse race. The Derby says it all in a couple of minutes, like a falling star or the blast-off of a space shot.

Trying to explain the Derby's appeal is a little like trying to analyze why people fall in love. Barry Bingham Sr., the Louisville newspaper chairman, has called it "a perfect blending of sentiment, suspense, and superb spectacle."

Stone, happily tackling the question today, said he thought the "emotional experience" was what people were looking for under the fabled twin spires at his track.

"It's the South," he said. "It's the horses, the gambling, the tobacco, the whisky. It's the river town, the farms, the mint juleps. It creates an antebellum image. The whole mystique. Stir

Proud Delta Takes Top Flight and Pays $12

By MICHAEL STRAUSS

Johnny Nerud, who developed such top-flight thoroughbreds as Dr. Fager, Gallant Mand and Intentionally, sent two of his Tartan Stable 4-year-old fillies, Imminence and Land Girl, yesterday to compete in the $75,000 added Top Flight Handicap at Aqueduct.

Five fillies and mares were entered to oppose the Tartan entry in the 37th running of the 1⅛-mile contest. Among the more highly regarded opposing it were Spring is Here, Shy Dawn and Proud Delta.

The order of finish was: Proud Delta, Let Me Linger and Spring Is Here. The time was 1:49.

The winner paid $12.

Nerud, who began his training career in Nebraska at the age of 18, said before yesterday's feature that he didn't consider either Imminence or Land Girl "great ones." He added, though, that they were available in his barn at a time when "I need them most."

"There are some good seasons and some poor ones," he said. "My consolation right now is that we have two dozen 2-year-olds under saddle. Until they show me otherwise, I have to keep thinking every one of them could turn into a big winner."

Going into the Top Flight, Imminence boasted only one stakes victory. Two weeks ago, the gray daughter of Native Charger posted a two-length victory at a mile in the Bed o' Roses Handicap. Five of the horses she defeated in that nine-horse race were listed to oppose her again yesterday.

Imminence was scheduled to carry 118 pounds, three more than she toted in her recent stakes triumph. Top-weights in the contest with 120 pounds apiece were Shy Dawn and Proud Delta. Land Girl was burdened with 113.

The victory by Imminence in the Bed o'Roses was her third in five starts this season. She won two allowance events, one at Hialeah and the other at the Big A. Last year, shescored five times in 16 outings while earning $62,046.

Preston M. Howe, the trainer of Proud Delta, was hoping the Top Flight would serve as a comeback for his filly. This 4-year-old, purchased for $250,000 from the Ada L. Rice dispersal last October, has two stakes successes to her credit this year—in the Affectionately and Rare Treat—both run at Aqueduct.

However, in her most recent appearances in the Next Move Handicap and Bed o'Roses—this daughter of Delta Judge was outrun by considerable margins. She was 13 lengths behind the winner in the Next Move and trailed Imminence in the Bed o'Roses in fifth place by 8½ lengths.

Nerud recalled with a smile that the only time he had sent a horse to Louisville for the Kentucky Derby, a "miscalculation" by Willie

Tennessee Equals World 800 Relay Mark

By JIM DUNAWAY

Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, April 24—The weather and the runners continued to sizzle as the first all-metric Penn Relays wound up the 82d edition of the world's oldest relay carnival in a blaze of fast anchor legs. Temperatures were only in the mid-80's but the crowd of more than 30,000 basked in a sun that seemed 10 degrees hotter.

The University of Tennessee 800-meter relay team was hotter. The Volunteers tied the world record of 1:21.5 seconds. The Vols were Lamar Preyor, Ronnie Harris, Jerome Morgan and Reggie Jones, who collected his third watch of the day.

Paul Cummings of the Beverly Hills Striders fought back and won the featured Ben Franklin metric mile in 3 minutes 38.9 seconds after a brilliant stretch duel with Wilson Waigwa of Kenya and Texas-El Paso. After Cummings had opened up a 15-yard lead with three-quarters of a lap to go, Waigwa began a long drive down the backstretch. He caught and passed the bespectacled Brigham Young graduate coming off the last turn, but Cummings gamely hung on and repassed Waigwa five yards from the tape.

Cummings, who had 400-meter splits of 0:57.3, 1:58.2, and 2:55.2, fell to the track semiconscious after reaching the finishing line. He was carried into the emergency first aid room suffering from heat exhaustion, but a doctor reported that he would be all right. Cummings covered the last 400 meters of the 1,500-meter race in 0:57.2, while Waigwa's last-lap split was 0:54.9.

Tennessee also won an equally exciting 400-meter relay from Arizona State in 39.4 seconds. Reggie Jones, the Vol's anchor man, made up two yards on Herman Frazier of Arizona State and won by two feet. Forty minutes later, Jones came back to collect his second Penn Relays watch by winning the college 100-meter dash in 0:10.2, and then sparkled again in the 800-meter event.

In the Olympic Development 100 meter event, Steve Williams of the Florida Track Club, who had been hoping to break the world record of 9.9 seconds, ran a wind-aided race in 19 seconds.

Villanova, which won the four-mile relay in 10 of the last 12 years, won the new

Yanks and Royals In Stadium Slugfest

By GERALD ESKENAZI

In the chill of the Stadium yesterday, the Yankees were trying to remain a team that had not tasted consecutive defeats this season as they faced the Kansas City Royals.

The score was 8-8 after nine innings.

Ed Figueroa, who came to New York in the deal with the California Angels for Bobby Bonds, took the mound with a bad head cold. He was opposed by Steve Busby, a pitcher with an easy motion attempting a comeback.

Busby was a top American League pitcher until he was struck on the right elbow with a ball hit by the Yanks' Mickey Stanley last August. His won-lost mark at the time was 15-9. He wound up at 18-12.

Although he permitted only five hits in five innings, Figueroa was replaced by Tidrow at the start of the sixth. It just wasn't the kind of day Figueroa liked, and he was feeling miserable when it started.

"I've got this cold in my nose," he said nasally before the game. "Last Saturday I pitched here when it was 92 degrees. I love that warm weather, I can pitch all day. Now it's 60 degrees. The weather is crazy here."

When it was over 90, he had pitched a shutout. He's used to the more predictable temperatures of Anaheim in Orange County, Calif., where he pitched the last few years for the Angels.

By the sixth inning the Yankees led, 4-3 despite having had only three hits. And they were the sort those old Yankees enshrined on plaques in left-center would have thrown back.

A walk, two stolen bases, a pop-fly single and a bad-hop single produced two runs in the third. Graig Nettles opened with a walk and stole second with two down. He came in on New York's first hit off Busby, a pop by Mickey Rivers. Then Rivers stole second and scored on Roy White's Bouncer off John Mayberry

Miss Guthrie Passes 'Test'

By MICHAEL KATZ

Special to The New York Times

TRENTON, April 24—Janet Guthrie, as nervous as a high school student before a college-entrance examination, passed her first "test" today on the road to Indianapolis.

Feeling comfortable only in her 743-horsepower racing car, the first woman driver to enter the Indianapolis 500 managed to get around the 1½-mile Trenton International Speedway oval at better than 150 miles an hour and stay out of trouble.

Since some of her 26 male rivals for tomorrow's Trentonian 200 did have some trouble, the chances are Miss Guthrie will qualify for the 22-car starting field.

Which didn't make her any less nervous.

"I saw her in the ladies room," said Melanie Simon, the wife of Miss Guthrie's teammate, Dick Simon. "She said she tought last week was tough enough, but she couldn't get away from all the reporters fast enough today."

Jackie Stewart, the former world drivers' champion who is here with the ABC-TV crew that will televise Miss Guthrie's debut in an Indy-type car (Channel 7, 4:30 P.M. E.D.T.), didn't have to speak to the 38-year-old "rookie" to know she was nervous.

"The girl is nervous," said Stewart as Miss Guthrie waited in the cockpit of her Vollstadt-Offenhauser before going out with the other rookies this morning in an "observation" session. "You always know a driver is nervous when the helmet visor begins to steam up."

Miss Guthrie did not burn up the track. Last week in testing here, she averaged 155 m.p.h. Today, she managed only 152.7. Her time of 35.52 seconds was almost three seconds slower than the

Yankees Pressed Illegal Agreement With Messersmith

By MURRAY CHASS

When Andy Messersmith plays baseball in New York this week, it will be for the Atlanta Braves at Shea Stadium, not for the Yankees at Yankee Stadium.

Messersmith, of course, almost played for the Yankees. If he had, though, he would have played under an agreement that, in part, would have been illegal.

The illegal portion of the agreement Messersmith nearly signed was a side letter the Yankees didn't intend to include with the uniform player's contract that was to be filed with the American League office. It covered two points, one dealing with the pitcher's dress and grooming, the other with an agreement under which the Yankees, at George Steinbrenner's suggestion, would have received 40 percent of all fees Messersmith would have earned for advertising and commercial endorsements.

The side agreement, illegal under baseball law, was part of the evidence introduced earlier this month in the two-day hearing held before Commissioner Bowie Kuhn into the dispute between the Yankees and Messersmith.

The 373-page transcript of the hearing, a copy of which was obtained by The New York Times, also disclosed the discrepancies between the contract negotiations and the contract itself, which prompted Messersmith to accuse the Yankees of dealing in bad faith and to refuse to play for them.

Other Differences Cited

Although the Yankees reiterated throughout the hearing that the only difference mentioned by the pitcher's agent during the negotiations dealt withthe no-cut, or guaranteed, provisionof the contract, the agent's testimony disclosed other differences as well —notably $125,000 interest on $500,000 in deferred payments; a no-trade provision; no reduction in the $100,000 yearly salary if the contract were renewed in the fifth, or option, year, and the use of a car in New York.

Steinbrenner, the principal owner, and Gabe Paul, the president, were the Yankee officials who testified at the hearing' They repeatedly said that Herb Osmond, the agent, told them he had the authority to make a deal for Messersmith, but they admitted that Osmond never showed them any paper granting him power of attorney. Furthermore, both Osmond and Messersmith denied that the agent had power of attorney.

Kuhn, of course, never ruled on the agreement the Yankees alleged they had withthe 30-year-old pitcher; the Yankees withdrew their claim first, saying they didn't want to pursue legally a player who didn't want to play for them.

The agreement on which the dispute centered consisted of three parts—the uniform player's contract; a two page addendum, including a schedule of payments on the deferred $500,000, and the illegal side letter. The letter was drawn up by the Yankees but it was to be signed "yours very truly" by Messersmith. "The undersigned," it said, "agrees as follows:

"1. For the seasons of 1976, 1977, 1978 and 1979, all proceeds received by Player from advertising and commercial endorsements of whatsoever nature shall be divided as follows: 50 percent shall be received by Player, 40 percent by the Club, and 10 percent by Herb Osmond, as Player's Agent.

"2. Player agrees that during the four year term of the Contract, he will abide by all rules and regulations promulgated by the Club, including, without limitation, those relating to dress,

Paris in the Spr... Sans Carpentier

By ULICK O'CONNOR

Imagine not wanting to go to Paris in the spring. Well, this year I don't. Other years when the daffodils came out I used to walk with Georges Carpentier in the Tuileries gardens. But he died before this year's daffodils came out. In November Peggy Roch of Elle Magazine said said: "I saw Georges yesterday in the Tuileries with his dachshund, Nobert, looking very fit." That afternoon when I went to call on him, as I normally did when I was in Paris, he was out. Two days later I read he was dead.

Last year when I saw him he explained his theory of the knockout. It was worth listening to, because Carpentier's fighting weight was only about 170 pounds, but he knocked out most of the leading heavyweights of his day: "You must aim like a marksman for the point of the chin. If you land, it is the end."

But what about Bombardier Billy Wells, whom Carpentier put away in less than a minute with a body punch? "Well, you see, his weak spot was his stomach, so I lowered my sights."

Had he ever missed?

"Yes, against Dempsey. I aimed for his chin. Just then he lowered his head. I landed on his cheekbone. I thought I had taken his head off. Then I thought my own hand had come off. Look!" He showed me his right hand with a lump of scar tissue over the thumb joint.

"Today there is only one puncher—Foreman. Ali is not a puncher." To which I could only reply that there weren't many boxers who would exactly relish an Ali haymaker.

"Yes; but what I mean by a puncher is a boxer who can knock out a man with one punch. Dempsey, Joe Louis, Benny Leonard, Ray Robinson, myself. Regardez!"

He started to glide across the carpet. His right hand was held just below his breastbone:

"One day I learned that a punch comes from the leg. Then I just sent my fist up with a thrust from my right thigh. After that they went out with one blow."

Carpentier was the best looking boxer in fight history. He had fair golden hair, blue eyes and Greek features. When I last saw him, though he was 80, those features were unmarked. I reminded him of the gory description Gene Tunney had given of how he lacerated Carpentier at the Polo Grounds, New York, in July, 1924. How had he preserved his face with the punishment he was supposed to have taken?

The voice became confidential, very Charles Boyer: "I always took a dive when I felt I could not win. It is easy to make your nose bleed, you know. Then I would smear it all over my face in between rounds. After that I went down—alors brave Georges."

Carpentier's glamour was such that women fainted at the ringside at the mere sight of him. After the first few seconds in the ring, his skin became pink in color. More girls would reach for smelling salts.

Mailbox: Nets' Attendance

To the Sports Editor:

There has been much criticism leveled at the lack of attendance at New York Net games. As an avid fan (a season ticket-holder the last three years, having attended well over 125 Net games over the last six years), I feel that now is the time to speak out as to why attendance has declined.

The primary reason (a thought shared by many of the other season ticket-holders around me and friends who have attended on their own) is the lack of a professional atmosphere. A fan who pays $6 or $7 for a seat for a game does not want to see a multitude of juvenile school bands or baton twirlers performing at every game. An example was a Sunday in March—Nets vs. Indiana Pacers—when several members of a preteenage brass band were permitted to trumpet "charge" into the public address system on every Net possession. It was enough to drive even the most dedicated fan up the wall, in some cases out of the arena.

A second reason is the use of the new scoreboard. Such sayings as "No boos for Hughes," or "Skinner is a winner," etc. It is embarrassing to try to see this display. Pertinent game statistics are almost never shown. I fail to remember the last time relevant figures on the game were shown. But the board never fails to remind me that "Melchionni suono buoni."

Of a more general nature are the problems facing the American Basketball Association as a whole. Given but seven teams, and when each team plays the other 13, 14, or 15 times a year, the truth of the saying "variety is the spice of life" was never more evident.

Lake Placid Olympics And a Look at 1981

To the Sports Editor:

Jack Murphy justifiably complained (April 4) about the $50 million requested from the Federal government for the 1980 Lake Placid Winter Olympics. He might have added that the point of staging the games here, patriotic palaver notwithstanding, is to obtain a super sports complex paid for by somebody else (anybody but us). Unfortunately, our local boosters have not yet figured out how to pass the buck for maintaining these facilities after the games are over. Perhaps the answer will be to claim bankruptcy in 1981.

A Correction

In last Sunday's Mailbox a reader wrote about a comment made by Lee MacPhail on the Toronto franchise situation. MacPhail was incorrectly quoted in the New York Times story last month as saying, "It's regrettable that there comes a time when you have to stand up for your principles." The quote should have read, "It's regrettable but there comes a time when you have to stand up for your principles."

On Putting the Money Where the Talent Is

By MICHAEL T. HARRIGAN

We are simply not going to do as well in international athletics as we have in the past unless amateur sports becomes better organized, better managed and better funded. No longer can we expect, as a country, to haphazardly support our athletes and expect to succeed. So, if we agree that broad-based participation, competition and winning are important goals, we have a lot of work to do. If we don't want to do well, we might as well fold up our tent and withdraw into sports isolationism.

The United States has deteriorated in its performance in international amateur athletic competition, partly because of the improvement of the rest of the world. In addition, the ever-increasing preoccupation with professional sport, with the attendant media coverage of it, has served to weaken the participation in and the coverage of amateur sport. About the only significant coverage amateur sport receives internationally, except for the Olympics, is to show how we are at such a disadvantage competing against the so-called amateurs of the Socialist countries.

Haven't we cried long enough about that? Let's do something about it. The amateur rules allow subsidization of athletes, so, if we want to subsidize, let's just do it.

I get annoyed with assertions that it is our amateurs against their pros After all, there are only a couple of sports where there is a stronger attraction to turn professional before seeking a gold medal in the Olympics.

One of those sports is basketball. But consider this: Every year, each pro team drafts perhaps 10 players. How many make it? One, maybe two. What happens to the rest? Most quit because they have no place to continue to compete and still bear the responsibilities of a family and a job.

In sports without a pro market, the situation may be worse. Consider wrestling, where most of our freestyle competitors are of college age or have just finished college. The Soviet wrestlers average several years older and obviously have considerably more international experience. Most of our good college wrestlers quit after college.

Is it right that our top women gymnasts and their families have to pay $5,000 to $6,000 a year to be good enough to represent their country? Is it right that our top women's figure skater pays $19,000 a year? Is it right that top-class athletes cannot get jobs because some businesses know they are athletes and will have to be away competing?

On the one hand, these athletes decide to make the sacrifice to compete. On the other hand, I think the country has some obligation to them if they are going to represent this country in international competition.

If we want to compete, let's get on with it, but within our system, within our way of doing things. Let's not nurture an elitist group of athletes, as some nations do, and ignore the rest. Let's broaden the participation base and bring athletes of all economic strata into our sports programs in the schools, colleges and clubs.

The American public has to be lifted from lethargy to see what is happening. The American public thinks largely of only track and field and swimming when it thinks of the Olympics. I disagree. Many sports, such as gymnastics, are making fantastic inroads, but are not there yet.

Americans had better realize soon that track and field and swimming no longer will enjoy dominance. The East German women are at least as good as our women swimmers, and with the exception of the decathlete, Bruce Jenner, no American male track and field athlete is a solid favorite. For the first time, we may not even win a medal in the 100-meter dash.

Our development in sports such as canoeing, cycling, fencing, field hockey, judo, modern pentathlon team handball vollyball, weight lifting and Greco-Roman wrestling is comparatively nonexistent. In the last Olympics, in all those sports, we won exactly one medal—a bronze in canoeing. In these sports, there is a staggering total of 174 medals. Considering the odds, our greatest feat in the last Olympics might have been that bronze medal in canoeing. It was also probably the least appreciated.

Most Americans do not ... what team handball is. To q... D. McNamara, Director of ... Sports, Department of Defe...

"Just ask yourself, now. If ... wants to get interested in fi... let us say, team handball, or gy... where does he go? How does ... started? What does he have t... Who are the leading people? W... are they situated? It is extremely d... cult."

That is part of the problem in ... nutshell: grass-roots development. A ... gold medal in team handball counts ... as much as one in basketball. And ... the thrill of competing and winning ... is as great for the team handball player ... as it is for the sprinter.

For these many reasons, President Ford formed the President's Commission on Olympic Sports. Its purpose is to improve the environment for amateur athletes in America by recommending a plan for improved organization of amateur sports and methods to infuse greater financial resources into amateur sport. I am confident we can accomplish these goals without the attendant problem of Government control.

the Islanders in the following manner:

If Philadelphia and Boston win their series—Islanders vs. Montreal. Philadelphia and Los Angeles—Islanders vs. Philadelphia. Toronto and Boston—Islanders vs. Boston.

Toronto and Los Angeles—Islanders vs. Los Angeles.

The Islanders would enjoy home-ice advantage in the four-of-seven-game semifinal only if they meet Los Angeles.

The four-year-old Islanders have advanced to this season's semifinals in a much more convincing and assured manner than last season when they faced elimination in one game of the preliminary round and in the four final games of the quarterfinal round.

Last season they were ousted by the Flyers in the semifinal round, but extended the series to seven games after losing the first three. This spring New York swept Vancouver in the preliminary round, 2-0, and beat Buffalo in the quarterfinal, 4-2.

"Last year," said Gerry Hart, an Islander defenseman, "we didn't have a lot of depth. After the seventh game in Pittsburgh [quarterfinal] we were suffering from a lot of fatigue. We didn't have the horses. We're much better prepared this year for the next series. Bring on the next team!"

In the Islanders' series with Pittsburgh last spring, the young club rallied from a three-game deficit, duplicating a feat performed by just one other team in N.H.L. history, the 1942 Toronto Maple Leafs.

This season's Maple Leafs are comparing themselves to last season's Islanders. Toronto is also a team of young players and, like the Islanders last season, were written off at the start of their series with Philadelphia.

By this time the Flyers may consider Toronto enough of a danger to bring out Philadelphia's good-luck charm, Kate Smith. She sang "God Bless America" before the seventh contest between the Flyers and the Islanders last spring and the Flyers won handily, 4-1.

the fight to be in the United States.

One thing is certain—Ali is not looking past Norton.

To drum up interest for the showdown, Norton has been placed on the Ali-Young card against Ron Stander, the courageous, wild swinger who enamored himself to the public before Joe Frazier knocked him out in a 1972 title bout.

The inclusion of Norton makes the nationally televised program (ABC, 10 P.M.) at the Capital Centre unusual. It marks the first time the heavyweight champion and No. 1 contender have fought on the same card against different opponents. It is estimated that more then 50 million people will view the action. A crowd of 20,000 is expected at the arena.

Young will receive $100,000, plus expenses, his biggest payday. Ali will earn $1 million, his customary figure for defenses against lesser opponents.

That Ali is slowing down is open to debate. His last fight, in February against Coopman, cannot be used as a yardstick to measure how much Frazier's punches slowed him down.

Ali can no longer "dance" for 15 rounds. When he began training for Young on April 16, he weighed 232 pounds with two visible rolls of skin around a waistline that ordinarily has one.

In his favor, Young is a workmanlike boxer who may not be intimidated by Ali's "psych" methods. He was Ali's sparring partner not long ago and is familiar with his style and tactics.

At 6 feet 2 inches and 210 pounds, with a 79-inch reach, Young, a former Philadelphia dockworker, matches Ali as well as anyone else has. Ali stands 6-3 and will hopefully weigh 228. He has an 80-inch reach.

Ilie Nastase also reached the final as he downed Adriano Panatta of Italy, 7-6, 6-2. He and Fibak play Monday.

Fibak who stopped topseeded Guillermo Vilas of Argentina in the quarterfinals yesterday, had no trouble with Okker in the first set, but stunned his Dutch opponent by battling back from 2-5 in the second set.

King Duo Triumphs

Pearson in Lead For Driving Award

David Pearson of Spartanburg, S.C., the victor in four super speedway races, gained the first phase of the 1975 Martini & Rossi driver of the year contest by receiving a unanimous vote of 14 automotive sports writers.

Pearson drove a Purolator Mercury and was aided by an outstanding pit team, the Wood brothers. The driver won the 500-mile events at Riverside, Calif., Daytona Beach, Atlanta, and Darlington, S.C.

Nicklaus 10 Under After 45

By JOHN S. RADOSTA

Special to The New York Times

NEW ORLEANS, April 24—A stiff breeze rose today to stop, at least temporarily, the epidemic of low scores that had characterized the first two rounds of the New Orleans open.

The result was that nobody among the leaders was innundating the par-72 Lakewood Country Club with birdies. The best they could do was to shoot even or approximately even par to maintain position.

These included Barney Thompson, one of the two surprise players who found themselves at the top after yesterday's play.

Birdies for Nicklaus

Thompson started today's round in the lead, at 10 under par, and after nine holes today and 45 for the tournament, was sharing the lead with Jack Nicklaus. Thompson reached the turn at 10 under.

Nicklaus entered today's round at nine under par and tied for second place with 24-year-old Bill Rogers, a second-year pro on the tour. Nicklaus bogeyed the second hole to drop to eight under par, but he made that up with birdies on the eighth and ninth to reach the turn at 10 under and a tie with Thompson.

Bill Rogers, the other surprise player in yesterday's round, lost three strokes on the front nine today. Starting at nine under par, he carded bogeys on the first, sixth and seventh holes to drop to six under. A birdie-bogey combination on the eighth and ninth holes left him at six under par after 45 holes.

Among the day's early finishers, Don January posted a 68 for 211, five under par for 54 holes. He was tied with George Cadle, who scored 67 today.

Other early finishers were Dave Eichelberger, David Shuster and Bobby Mitchell, at 213, and Ed Dougherty, Nate Starks, Bob Payne, Tommy Aaron and Tony Cerda at 214.

Tour Hard on New Players

The abrupt emergence from obscurity of players like Barney Thompson and Bill Rogers illustrates how unpredictable the pro tour is for young players struggling to get established.

Whenever ideal weather and golf-course conditions yield a big crop of low scores, as they have in the first two days of this tournament, a handful of unknown players come to the surface to claim some attention. "Who's he?" is the frequently asked question.

On Thursday, there were names like Monty Kaser, Wally Armstrong and Mike Reasor. Yesterday's honors fell to Thompson and Rogers.

Youngsters like these are easily discouraged by failures and by thwarted aspirations, and sometimes they get down on themselves. Their emergence catches even them by surprise. Thompson, whose confidence is limited, was making plans to go home to West Virginia even before play started because he did not feel strongly that he would make the 36-hole cut.

Big-League is Formidable

"It's easy to get discouraged out here," said Thompson, who has won only $2,730 this year.

He was a basketball star at Marshall, and as a new golf professional he did well in home competition. But since joining the tour in 1974 he had found big-league competition formidable, if not overwhelming.

"It's hard for me to get used to not doing well," he said. "That's why I thought of giving it up. I'm impatient but out here you have to be patient. It's hard for me to do."

Rogers, who attended the University of Houston on a golf scholarship, is in his second year on the tour. After tying for second place yesterday with Nicklaus, he was rather like a man blinkging on coming out of a tunnel into bright sunlight.

Remembers the Heritage

He was slightly surprised to find himself in second place, and he was also apprehensive. After all, in the Heritage classic last March he was within two shots of the lead after 36 holes but he plummeted to 56th by shooting an 80 and 74 in the last two rounds.

"The pressure is there," he said, after shooting 66 yesterday. "There are a lot of big names up there with the leaders, and it's always tough on a young guy who hasn't broken through yet."

For a while yesterday he just did not want to know what was happening—he avoided looking at the leader boards around the golf course, but he wavered and then gave in.

"I'm usually more concerned with myself than anyone else," he said. "But when I got to five under, [par] I caught myself glancing up there — just to see how I stood."

After 20 Years, Sugar Ray

Sugar Ray Robinson came prancing down a staircase into the Plaza lobby, moving so light and easy that 20 years peeled away in an instant and a man watching him found himself back in the days when Ray was welterweight champion of the world moving up to take the middleweight championship.

In those days the man had occasion to visit the zoo out in St. Louis now and then, and by choice he would go directly to the cage where a black jaguar lived. He would stand transfixed by the fearful symmetry of that restless cat, and he would allow himself a small flight of fancy. "Good morning, Ray," he would say, sensing again the supple menace of Robinson in the ring. "You're looking good, Ray."

Sports of The Times

Now the man watched Robinson moving on the balls of his feet. "A little heavier," he thought. "Probably a light-heavyweight now, but still a cat in motion." He got up from his chair and they greeted each other. Robinson had a room on the second floor, by request, because the greatest fist-fighter of his time is afraid of elevators.

He does not fear heights and be never feared an opponent. "Only elevators," he said. "I went down in one in the Empire State Building a long time ago, and I thought my stomach fell out of me. Never again."

He introduced his wife, Millie, and they all went into the Oak Room for lunch. "Hello, Champ," the maitre d'hotel said, "Welcome." "Nice to have you here, Champ," the captain of waiters said. He got the party seated, turned away and was back in a moment. "The lady over there would like your autograph."

"I remember just after you retired," a man said," when you didn't have that retinue you used to carry around, George Gainford, Harry Wiley, Pee Wee Beale and your barber and secretary and valet and all the others. You told me how lonesome you were."

"I had to get used to it," Ray said. "I always liked people around me."

Sugar Walker Smith

Robinson is in New York for a dinner at the Plaza Tuesday night celebrating the 50th anniversary of the Boys' Athletic League, where he will be saluted with other outstanding athletes reared in the city—Whitey Ford for baseball, Sid Luckman for football, Gertrude Ederle, swimming, and so on. Ray lives in Los Angeles now, but once this town belonged to him.

He had 202 recorded fights as a professional and at least half again that many in the bootleg amateurs, when Gainford had fleets of cars hauling young boxers to Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Poughkeepsie. On the bootleg circuit an amateur could work six nights a week for $10 or maybe as much as $25 a bout, which wasn't bad for a kid too young to be licensed under his real name, Walker Smith.

"Gainford gave me this card with the name, Ray Robinson," he said. "I got to be good friends with the real Ray Robinson. Last I saw, he was tending bar in Harlem. I thought when I turned pro I'd go back to my real name, but Sugar Walker Smith didn't sound right."

"Among all your fights," it was suggested, "there must have been one that gave you more satisfaction than any other. Not necessarily a title fight, but one when you did exactly what you wanted to do and made the other fellow fight your way."

"The second Zivic fight," he said. Fritzie Zivic, who took the welterweight title from Henry Armstrong, was as wily and resourceful a battler as ever lived, supremely uninhibited by the rules. "I'd never fought anybody with his kind of experience," Robinson said.

Sugar Ray Robinson

"I lasted longer than Goldstein"

"I didn't know a guy could do that to you in the ring. I learned enough from him so when we fought again I was able to do what I planned and I knocked him out."

"How about Maxim?"

In 1952 Ray tried to move up another division and take Joey Maxim's light-heavyweight title. The temperature was over 100 degrees in Yankee Stadium, away from the heat of the ring lights. In the 10th round Ruby Goldstein, the referee, passed out. With Ray Miller as fourth man in the ring, Robinson stayed until the 14th, then swooned.

"I lasted longer than Goldstein," he said now, "and nobody was hitting him." He finished his chef's salad and leaned back.

"When I was a kid," he said, "I'd be up at Joe Louis's camp in Pompton Lakes, N. J. Jack Blackburne was up there, that old man, how he could talk about the art of self-defense! He loved to fish and I'd row, row, row for him and he'd be talking. How I loved to listen at that old man! If he was talkin' now I'd still be rowin'."

The Hardest Fight

"And your toughest fight was Charley Fusari?"

Ray's eyes grew wide. Then he giggled. When he was outgrowing the welterweight division and hadn't yet won the middleweight title, boxing commissions were threatening to vacate the welter championship unless he defended. He took one dollar for a charity bout, with a secret agreement that he wouldn't have to make 147 pounds.

"After that one," Millie was told, "they called him the greatest carrier since Typhoid Mary."

"Hardest thing I ever did," Ray said. "Fighting 15 rounds for me and 15 for Charley."

Today his time is given to Sugar Ray's Youth Foundation, which, since 1969, has conducted athletic and crafts programs for kids in Los Angeles County, with younger chapters in Las Vegas and San Francisco.

"All kids want recognition," he said. "A pat from Wilt Chamberlain, a word from Hank Aaron. We got all these sports programs, girls the same as boys. I've told Mayor Beame I want to start a program in New York. Juvenile crime is the greatest peril in our nation. You can't just keep putting 'em in jail, that's not the answer. The thing I'm proudest, there's never been a paid member on my board of directors."

"How do you live, Ray?"

His smile was wide. "A gig here, a commercial there."

Earlier in the week, Erving was voted the league's most valuable player for the third straight year. He won easily in 1974, shared the honor with George McGinnis last year when the Nets were eliminated in the first round of the playoffs, and received 32 of the 35 votes cast by the press this year for the award.

The 26-year-old forward was the league leader in scoring with a 29.3 average, and was among the top eight in six other categories—fifth in rebounding (11 a game), eighth in 2-point fieldgoal accuracy (52 percent), seventh in 3-point fieldgoal accuracy (33 percent), seventh in assists (five a game), seventh in blocked shots (1.9 agame) and third in steals (2.5 a game). He also shot 80 percent from the free-throw line.

"There's no question in my mind he's the outstanding player in basketball," said Kevin Loughery, the Nets' coach. "There's nobody else who can make as many things happen as he can."

Erving's skills are not limited to the basketball court. He is the captain of the team, vice president of A.B.A. players association and a frequent participant in youth activities. His steady plays extends to the high-stakes poker games played during airplane trips.

The games generally include teammates John Williamson, Ted McClain and Bill Melchionni, Coach Loughery, and Barney Kremenko, the team's publicist. In the high-low games, pots of $60 are usual and it is not uncommon to see $100 spread along the aisle in the first-class section of the plane.

So Much Cash

On the trip to San Antonio this week, Erving had so much money in front of him he was asking the stewardess for a rubber band to keep it together.

Returning to New York on Thursday, he had another run of luck. "I believe I'll take my wife out to dinner tonight," the forward said, making careful piles of the $20, $10, $5 and $1 bills in front of him.

Holtz's Tight Ship Buoys Aspiring Jets

The New York Times/Robert Walker

Dave Buckey working with weights at Hempstead, L.I., as Jet rookies met to take physical tests.

They are, after all, not far past boyhood, these powerful young men, most of whom are still college students. They sat on the floor of the Jets' camp, uncomplaining, as they waited for someone to look at their teeth or for someone to probe their muscles or to test their strength.

They are the rookies and free agents. Their two-day test of a big-league football camp ended yesterday, and today they will be flying back to school to tell their teammates what it was like out in Hempstead, L.I.

"It's everything I thought it would be," said the club's second draft choice, a powerfully built, quick-smiling defensive back named Shafer Suggs. "It's efficient and they really test you."

The No. 1 draft pick, Richard Todd, the man the Jets expect to replace Joe Namath, said: "I've never seen anything like this. Why, they even weighed me under water."

A Different Notice

The man whose imprint has been stamped on this camp so strongly, without a scrimmage even being held, stays out of sight. The door to Coach Lou Holtz's office is always closed. From 8 in the morning until 11 at night he has been creating a team in his image. He would have liked to have changed the uniforms, too, but the National Football League requires a year's notice.

The rookies read a notice on the bulletin board—the only notice posted at the camp. The solitary sheet of paper told people who have nothing to do with the club to get out.

It is a short, simple message and it is in contrast to previous years at other Jets' camps, when girl friends or used-car dealer or a dentist-fan would walk around.

"If anyone wants to discuss this philosophy with me," says Holtz in the letter on the board, "make an appointment with my secretary."

The Intangibles

Privately, Holtz warns a visitor, "My players may not like me. I'm tough. You don't know how tough I can be."

Last night, most of the 63 young hopefuls might have had some idea. He met with each youngster. The group is personified by the Buckey boys—the twins, Don and Dave. They played for Holtz at North Carolina State.

Neither has the physical characteristics that players at their positions with hope to make it in the N.F.L. are supposed to possess: Don is an admittedly slow-moving wide receiver, and Dave is a 162-pound quarterback.

But they have certain qualities that Holtz insists upon. They are selfless and team-oriented.

A Mile for a Minute

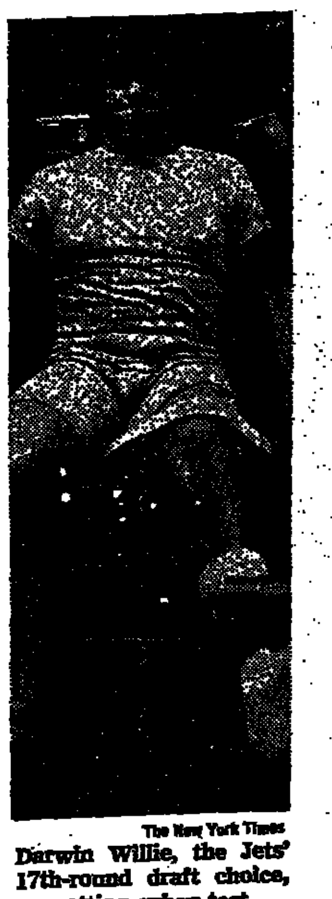
Holtz, in a typically cagey move designed to alienate neither twin, drafted them consecutively on the same round.

"He's demanding," says Don of Holtz. "He's a perfectionist. He's picky about the way things are done—and he won't settle for anything less than his way of getting it done."

There are those who have played for Holtz who might even feel that the coach is never satisfied.

"He might make you feel that way," Don conceded.



The New York Times

Darwin Willie, the Jets' 17th-round draft choice, getting cybex test.

"But he's also very fair."

Last season, the Buckeys, both established stars, were a minute late to a team meeting. Holtz made them run a mile apiece.

Except for his brief talks over the weekend, he stayed out of sight. Mostly, the rookies saw medical people and other coaches.

The strangers included the team dentist, Mike Kopiik, who was doing a crossword puzzle while waiting for patients.

"I'm having trouble filling in the upper right," said the dentist.

In the weight room, the players huffed and strained as they punished their bodies through pull-ups and weight lifting and special muscle testing.

A Touch of Class

In season, the locker room is a noisy place, but it was a haven of quiet during the testing. The players were impressed by viewing a closed-circuit showing of the last Muhammad Ali-Joe Frazier bout. Two players shared a locker, with their names taped side by side. Predictably, a player named Howard was placed next to one named Hughes.

The youngsters don't know who will make it and who will be invited back for the start of camp in July, but those who are will possess, according to Holtz, qualities such as "courage," and "they will know their mental assignments. There will be no breakdowns."

These players had never met a coach who believes that stupidity is simply a state of mind.

Profile of Packers: Profit Despite Loss

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE

Fred N. Trowbridge Sr., an attorney, is the treasurer of the Green Bay Packers and a member of the executive committee that has run the organization loosely since 1950. He has one annual duty of note—to release the team's financial statement. Last week he said the Packers had a 1975 net profit of $784,830, an increase of $656,405 over the previous year. The Pack did a lot better in the counting house than on the field, where it won only four games.

About Pro Football

The profit represented a 12 percent return on gross receipts of $6,362,205. It came when many owners in the National Football League, like Carroll Rosenbloom of Los Angeles, contended that at least half the clubs were losing money and profits were shrinking because of the players' heavy demands and crushing legal fees.

Trowbridge's announcement was made the same day Wellington Mara of the Giants, representing the owners, and Dick Anderson of the Dolphins, representing the players, ended another session of contract negotiations in Miami without reaching an agreement.

The Packers' total assets amount to $10,769,416, much of it in cash. Should the N.F.L. expire and the Packers be dissolved, the assets would go to an American Legion post in Green Bay, Wis., under the terms of the franchise's original incorporation.

"Imagine what kind of a party they could have," said a Packer official.

This is the old town team that Andy Turnbull and George Calhoun of the Press-Gazette saved from going under in the Depression by persuading Green Bay businessmen to buy stock in it. It is a community-owned, nonprofit corporation in which 4,656½ shares are owned by 1,728 shareholders.

The rules made back then were that any profits would be reinvested in the team and no dividends were ever to be paid.

The Packers did not make big money until Vince Lombardi and the national television contracts came along in the early 1960's. Lombardi used up the profits by enlarging the stadium, giving the players' wives mink stoles, placing a heating grid under the field to prevent it from freezing and giving Donny Anderson a $750,000 contract in 1966, then the largest of its kind.

How could a team's profit go from $128,425 to $784,830 while its won-lost record went from 6-8 to 4-10? For one thing, Dan Devine, the free-spending coach, left for Notre Dame and his successor, Bart Starr, is more economy-minded. For another, some high-salaried players departed—Gail Gillingham, MacArthur Lane and Ted Hendricks. It was Devine who raised Hendricks's salary from $48,500 to $125,000 in one year.

There were more reasons. The team had big paydays on the road in Los Angeles, Dallas, Detroit and New Orleans. (Visiting teams in the N.F.L. take home 40 per cent of the gate.) Air travel to other "away" games was reduced because those games were near home.

Television income was up and the club did not have to make a payment to the pension fund because the contract with the players' association ran out in 1974. That was a $175,000 item.

Also payments that the Baltimore, Cleveland and Pittsburgh teams received from the other clubs for having moved to the American Conference in 1970 stopped in 1974, and payments from the new expansion franchises began in 1975. Those were the $16 million initiation fees Seattle and Tampa Bay were paying to the 26 established clubs.

So income was up, to $6,362,205, and operating expenses were down, from $4.3 million to $3.7 million.

The figures came out when a financing drive was on to enlarge the Packer museum, with $25 contributions sought.

The team has given $300,000 of a projected $550,000. Cherry Starr, the coach's wife, and Tony Canadeo, an old-time star, are honorary chairmen for the drive.

Will the drive slow down because the Packers are so rich? No, Green Bay isn't that kind of place. The drive is only $45,000 short of its goal.

Are the other N.F.L. teams faring as well? That is hard to say for sure. The only other one that issues a statement is the publicly owned New England Patriots, who do not do as well as the Packers. But pleas of poverty would seem implausible.

Pistons Beaten, 113-96

DETROIT, April 24 (AP)—Jamaal Wilkes, who scored only 2 points the first three quarters, added 15 in the final period today to break up a close game and send the Golden State Warrios to a 113-96 National Basketball Association victory over the Detroit Pistons.

Detroit, which trailed by as many as 16 points late in the third quarter, pulled to within 3 at 86-83, with 9 minutes 30 seconds left in the game, then Wilkes went on his scoring spree and Phil Smith helped out to give the Warriors a 2-1 advantage in the four-of-seven game series.

Smith finished with 34 points, while Rick Berry, who had a poor shooting day in the nationally televised game, had 19.

Bob Lanier grabbed 10 rebounds and scored 12 points in the first quarter for Detroit and then George Johnson and Cliff Ray did a superb defensive job the rest of the way to stymie the Pistons' ace.

Lanier wound up with 23 points and the next highest Piston was Archie Clark with 13.

Detroit surged to a 14-4 lead in the opening minutes before Golden State battled back. Detroit's last lead was 36-34, eight minutes into the second period.

The Warriors outscored the Pistons, 14-2, in a six-minute span and took a 53-48 halftime advantage.

In the early moments of the second half the Warriors outscored Detroit, 14-3, and it wasn't until the final two minutes of the third quarter that the Pistons got back in the game by outscoring Golden State, 10-2.

The outcome snapped a nine-game home victory string for the Pistons, who will be hosts to the Warriors on Monday night.

Team America Has International Roster

By ALEX YANNIS

The Brazilian Soccer Federation last week released the names of players to represent the country in the American Bicentennial Soccer Cup. Pelé's name was not on that list, as Pelé is expected to play for Team America in the tournament that also includes the national teams of England and Italy.

News of Soccer

Pelé, however, made it clear in a news conference in Miami that he would never play against his country. Team America and Brazil are scheduled to meet in Seattle on May 28. Pelé will be watching from the sidelines that night, but he is expected to see action in the tournament's opening game on May 23 at Robert F. Kennedy Stadium in the nation's capital, when Team America takes on Italy at 1 P.M.

Although Team America will be composed of players regardless of nationality, several native players are expected to see plenty of action. Under the direction of Ken Furphy, 30 players will gather at Hofstra University on May 3 and 4 to have their first workout.

Two of the tournament's six games will be played in this area. The England-Italy contest on Friday night, May 28, will be played at Yankee Stadium and the Brazil-Italy game will be held at the Yale Bowl in New Haven at 3 P.M. on Memorial Day.

Tickets for these two games will go on sale May 2 at the New York Cosmos' game at Yankee Stadium and on May 3 at over 100 locations throughout the metropolitan area. For the England-Italy game, tickets are priced at $15, $12, $10 and $8, and for young people 16 and under they are $4. For the Memorial Day game at Yale Bowl tickets are priced at $12, $10, $8. Tickets for the 16-and-under crowd are $4 for that game, too.

Besides at Ticketron outlets, tickets will be available at the Cosmos' ticket office in the lobby of the Warner Communications Building at 75 Rockefeller Plaza. All proceeds from this tournament, which could clear close to a $1 million, will benefit the development of coaching, youth soccer and the United States World Cup team.

Gene Edwards, the president of the United States Soccer Federation, sponsor of the tournament, said: "We have calls and written requests for thousands of tickets for these two games. Travel services in Italy are bringing large groups and Canadian groups are chartering planes."

With the large capacity (72,000) of the Yale Bowl, it is possible the Brazil-Italy game on Memorial Day will surpass the record of 58,000 who watched the Cosmos-Seattle game at Seattle's Kingdome on April 9.

The North American Soccer League, in its second week of league action, announced that each of the seven opening-day crowds were larger than last season . . . The league's first player of the week was Al Trost, a midfielder of the St. Louis Stars . . . Four of the first seven games were shutouts, a sign that emphasis will be on defense . . . The rating for the Cosmos' game that was televised live in New York from Miami last Sunday was 5.1. Jim Karvellas, Pete Gogolak and Howard David were the announcers of the Channel 9 telecast . . . The Hartford Bicentennials have announced that all their home games will be shown on a delayed basis by the United Cable Television Corporation of Connecticut . . . The Minnesota Kicks have sold more than 2,000 season tickets, while the Sounders are close to 12,000 . . . The United States Soccer Federation will hold its annual convention between July 1 and July 5.

The Olympic Time Capsule

United Press International

Emil Zatopek

"Za-to-pek, Za-to-pek"

In his search for yesterday, Bud Greenspan had been unable to discover film of the famous 1908 Olympic marathon. Exhausted and delirious, Dorando Pietri of Italy lurched, wobbled and collapsed after entering White City Stadium in London, where the 26-mile-385-yard course ended. Helped to his feet, he fell three more times. Finally he was dragged across the finish line by officials who feared for his life. But that resulted in the Italian's disqualification and the award of the gold medal to Johnny Hayes, the American who had arrived 34 seconds later under his own power. No film of this drama existed, or so the people at Movietone News in London told Bud Greenspan.

Sports of The Times

"But," somebody there said, "you can look around if you wish."

In a storage room, Bud Greenspan noticed a dusty carton marked "1908." In it he found the film he cherished. Now that sepia-toned film is in "The Marathon," one of his 10 one-hour TV documentaries that form "The Olympiad," which will be shown by the Public Broadcasting Service (Channel 13) beginning May 6.

As a primer for the Summer Olympics in Montreal, the series is a must. As sports television, it is a classic.

"We went to 20 countries," says the ...-year-old writer, director and producer. It took us 3½ years to do it. We used at three-million feet of film and shot one-million feet. We have footage going back to 1896, three feet of film showing the crowd going into the Olympic Stadium in Athens. The idea was to create a series that could be put in a time capsule, that could be viewed 50 or 100 years from now without changing a word."

'I Wish to Win'

The pageantry and the music of the Olympics are there, but mostly the athletes are there, as they were when they competed and as they are now in recalling their moments.

"I am surprised," remembers Emil Zatopek of Czechoslovakia, the winner of the 5,000 meters, the 10,000 meters and the marathon in 1952, "to come to Olympic Stadium and read that it is not to win but to take part.

"But," and he laughs, "I wish to win."

When he entered the stadium in Helsinki as the obvious winner of the marathon, the crowd was chanting "Zatopek." "Coming into the stadium, I hear 'Za-to-pek, Za-to-pek,'" he remembers with another smile, "and I say 'Oh, me, I must win.'"

Emil Zatopek is included in "The Incredible Five" program along with Al Oerter, the American discus thrower who won a record four gold medals in 13 years; Fanny Blankers-Koen, the Dutch sprinter who won four gold medals in 1948 at London; Paavo Nurmi, the Finnish distance runner who won gold medals in 1924 at Paris; and Vera Caslavska, the Czech gymnast who won seven gold medals in 1964 and 1968.

"These are the Olympic Games," says Oerter, "and you die for them."

Jim Thorpe is dead, his gold medals in the 1912 decathlon and pentathlon restored because his amateur standing was revoked over semipro baseball payments. But he is alive in "The Decathlon," the opening show. Bob Mathias, the only two-time winner, is seen in the dark and rain of London at 17 and in Helsinki four years later. The 1960 duel at Rome between two University of California, Los Angeles friends, Rafer Johnson and C. K. Yang, is documented event by event. Four years earlier, Milt Campbell had defeated an ailing Johnson at Melbourne.

"You're the only person," Milt Campbell told Bud Greenspan recently, "to say that even if Rafer were fit, it is doubtful that he could have defeated me there."

Visually, perhaps the most compelling scene is "The African Runners" opening. Training on a green mountain in Ethiopia, perhaps a dozen Africans run up, up, up as easily as most people run downhill. That segment was filmed by Bud Greenspan's wife, Cappy, and in it Ben Jipcho, the Kenyan rabbit, wonders about the ethics of the strategy that drained Jim Ryun and helped his teammate, Kip Keino, win the 1,500 meters in 1968 at Mexico City.

"It was unfair to Jim Ryun," says Jipcho. "It was very good for Kenya but unfair to other guys."

Spurned by the Networks

Mildred (Babe) Didriksen and Wilma Rudolph are seen in "The Women Gold Medal Winners," along with Eleanor Holm, the swimmer, who discusses her controversial suspension for drinking champagne en route to Berlin in 1936.

"Hitler told me," she recalls, "that if I had been a German, the punishment would have come after—if I had lost."

The other shows are "The Persistent Ones," "The Russian Athlete," "The Australians," "The Big Ones That Got Away" and a rerun of "Jesse Owens Returns to Berlin," the documentary that inspired Bud Greenspan to do the series that the three major networks spurned.

"NBC and CBS didn't want to advertise an event that ABC had exclusive TV rights to," Bud Greenspan says, "and ABC didn't want to use a series its own sports department hadn't developed."

Until the Wall Street investment firm of E. F. Hutton provided a $200,000 grant, "The Olympiad" loomed as the best sports TV series never seen in the United States, although it has been or will be shown in more than 50 other nations. But some will wonder why Muhammad Ali and Mark Spitz aren't featured somewhere in the series.

"Ali's greatness developed after his Olympic victory," Bud Greenspan explains. "As for Mark Spitz, the visual aspects of water splashing aren't much. It's difficult to see a swimmer's emotions. And as a personality, he left me cold in a couple of interviews. His agent also wanted a lot of money."

metric version, the 6,000-meter relay, in the same old style. Eamonn Coghlin, the latest in Coach Jumbo Elliott's long line of great milers, cruised away from Dave Merrick of Penn with a 1,500-meter anchor leg time of 3:42.5, equivalent to a 4:00.2 mile. The Wildcats' overall time of 15:03 figures out to an average of 3:45.7 per leg, equivalent to a per-mile average of 4:04.

Moving even faster were the half-milers who anchored the sprint medley relay championship race, won by the University of Florida in 3:13.9 with Horace Tuitt running the 800-meter anchor leg in 1:46.4. Behind Florida came Adelphi, with Bill Dabney anchoring in 1:46.9, Catholic (Mark Robinson, 1:45.7), Seton Hall (Orlando Greene, 1:46.8) and Bucknell (Tom McLean, 1:45.5). All of them will be back for the National Collegiate championships to be held here the first week in June.

Although all the relays at the new metric distances produced meet records in the sense that they were being run for the first time, Seton Mall's victory in the 440-meter shuttle hurdles event was purely a meet record. The Pirate foursome of Kevin Webb, Reggie Blackshear, Kevin McEvoy and Larry Bunting were clocked in :56.8 under the former mark set by Penn in 1972 over the shorter 480-yard distance. Seton Hall's time was the fastest in the world this year.

Lennex Sets Jump Mark

Ed Lennex of St. Joseph's set a meet record, and a personal one, in the triple jump with 54 feet 3 inches. The 6-3 senior, who missed most of the 19975 season after having had a torn cartilage removed from his knee, made two other jumps that bettered the previous meet record of 53-5¼.

"All I'm trying to do is jump a little better each week than I did the last time," said Lennex. Two months ago his best was 52-7.

EEarlier, two foreign contenders for National Collegiate and Olympic honors won the throwing event held today. Bill Olsen, a Canadian who attends the University of Tennessee, won the javelin throw by 25 feet with a toss of 267 feet 2 inches. Only 199, Olsen has already won three Canadian championship, and has been selected for the Canadian Olympic team.

The shot-put was won by Hans Almstrom, a sophomore at Texas-El Paso from Sweden. Almstrom's winning put was 62 feet 4½ inches, but he says, "I'll have to throw at least 67 feet to make the Swedish team. Anyway, 10 o'clock in the morning is too early for me. I'm very slow in the morning—it takes too long for the messages to get from my head to my muscles."

Women's Mark Set in 5,000

DES MOINES, April 24 (AP)—Peg Neppel, a 22-year-old from Iowa State set an American women's record in the 5,000-meter run today at the 67th Drake Relays.

Miss Neppel was timed in 16 minutes 28.48 seconds, erasing the previous national record of 16:38 set in 1974 by Julie Brown of the Los Angeles Track Club.

Cheryl Bridges of Los Angeles finished second about 75 yards back and Kathy Schilly of the Syracuse Chargers was a distant third.

An American high school mark was set in the open 10,000-meter run by Rudy Chapa, 18 of Hammond, Ind. Chapa running unattached, finished fifth in 28:32.64 to topple the previous national prep record of 28:54.8 by Eric Hulst, Laguna Beach, Calif., set earlier this year. Chapa's six-mile time of 27:36.4 also erased Hulst's record of 27:58. The race was won by Ed Mendoza of Arizona in 28:23.16.

It was a repeat victory for Franklin. It won the 440 here last year with three of the same runners. In addition to Bennett Long, these include his brother, Bernard, and Greg Moore, all juniors. The other foursome member today was Clint Young, an all-Philadelphia football player.

Overbrook was second in a very respectable 41.4 seconds. No New York City area teams made the 400-meter final.

Also noteworthy in the class relays was a 49.5 seconds 400-meter leg by Bill Hartley of Southern Regional, Manahawkin, N.J. yesterday. Hartley became the first East Coast schoolby to clear 16 feet in the pole vault. His relay team also failed to qualify.

Qualifying times in the 1,600-meter relays were fast with 3:19.2 just barely making the final round of eight. Calibar of Kingston, Jamaica, turned in the fastest time, 3:15.4, in barely edging Mount Vernon, the defending champion, by two steps.

Russ Dickinson of Octorar High in Atglen, Pa., captured the triple jump at 46 feet 8 inches. John Horton of Manhasset, L.I., was second at 46-6¾. Darden finished fifth at 45-9¾. One observer said that sounded more like Darden's split for 400 meters.

"The car was refined, tight, well finished and, most of all, intelligent."

Road & Track Magazine. April 1976
Reference to Lancia Beta Sedan

Intelligent. It's not a word that is used often to describe an automobile. But we think it's a word that characterizes Lancia.

Because if you compare the Lancia to an overpriced European luxury car or the usual mass-produced Detroit status symbol, it certainly is intelligent. The intelligent alternative. Because it's a luxury, performance car that's realistically priced.

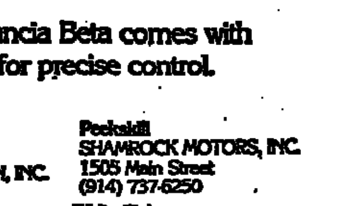
Why haven't you heard of Lancia before?

Because very few Lancias have ever come to America.

But in Europe, Lancia is one of the oldest and most respected car manufacturers. And it's now a division of Fiat.

The new Lancia that's now available in America is the Lancia Beta. And it comes in two body styles: a Coupe and a 4-door Sedan.

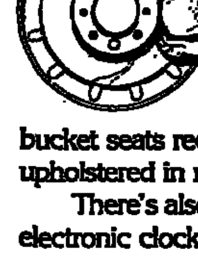
It's powered by a highly responsive 4-cylinder, twin overhead cam engine that's extremely reliable and doesn't require constant maintenance. And it's coupled to a 5-speed overdrive transmission. So the engine can run more efficiently with less wear and tear at highway speeds.



The Lancia Beta also has front-wheel drive. So it has incredible traction on wet, slippery roads.

What's more, the Lancia Beta comes with rack-and-pinion steering for precise control.

Fully independent suspension for a smooth, stable ride. And power-assisted disc brakes on all wheels, designed for well controlled, straight stops — even in panic situations.



The interior of the Lancia Beta is equally impressive. The front bucket seats recline, and in the Coupe, are upholstered in real leather.

There's also an adjustable steering column, an electronic clock, and thick, plush carpeting. And since the engine is mounted sideways, there's plenty of room for passengers and their luggage.

How much does the Lancia Beta cost?

A lot less than many people think.

The base price of the Coupe is $7,510*. And the 4-door Sedan is substantially less.

The Lancia Beta, like any fine car, must be driven to be fully appreciated. That's why we suggest you visit your nearest Lancia dealer and arrange for a test drive.

We think you'll discover that the Lancia Beta is an intelligent, well thought-out car that is appropriately labeled the intelligent alternative.

Lancia, pronounced Lon-cha.

Rule 3 (a). "The making of an agreement between a club and a player not embodied in the contract shall subject grooming and appearance."

According to Major League both parties to discipline and no such agreement, whether written or verbal, shall be recognized or enforced."

Moss Questions Paul

Richard Moss, counsel for the Players Association who represented Messersmith at the hearing, questioned Gabe Paul about the letter:

Q. Is this letter the kind of agreement that the rule provides for?

A. I would say that if you sent it into the office it would be accepted.

Q. If you sent it into what office?

A. The league office.

Q. I thought this was to be a side letter not attached to the contract.

A. You can send an agreement not attached to the contract. There are many agreements that are sent not attached to the contract.

. . . was it your intention tract?

A. No.

Q. Do you have such agreements with other players that are not embodied in the contract?

A. I don't think I have to answer that.

Q. Are you refusing to answer on the Fifth Amendment ground or what?

At this point, Jesse Climenko, the Yankees' lawyer, objected to the question and Moss eventually gave up trying to get Paul to say whether or not he has made such side agreements with other players.

The New York Times
Gabe Paul

It is known, however, that officials of various clubs ignore the rule and draw up side letters that never reach the league offices. Gaylord Perry, for example, reportedly had a $7,500 expense account when he and Paul both worked for the Cleveland Indians that wasn't included in the contract.

Thus, the side agreement with Messersmith wasn't unusual. What was novel, though, was the Yankees' share of the pitcher's endorsements. That came about as a trade for interest on the deferred payment.

Steinbrenner, in negotiating with Osmond the night of March 27 in Tampa, Fla., at first resisted including interest of any kind on the $500,000, but Osmond insisted on interest or there would be no deal.

Osmond had said earlier in their talks that Messersmith wasn't interested in commercials or public appearances. Steinbrenner then paired the ideas, suggesting that he would pay interest if Osmond would agree to the Yankees' getting a large chunk of Andy's endorsement fees.

He'll Be Interested

". . . when he gets to New York and we see what is available to him," Steinbrenner, in his testimony, said he told the agent, "as well as what I can get him in addition to what normally would come to him, because he will be a big name—I said I think very much that Andy will want to be interested. And I put this proposition to you: if we contribute the interest, you will give us 50 percent of whatever Andy makes the net revenues that Andy makes in these advertisements, and you would keep 50 percent, meaning Andy."

Osmond agreed to the 50-50 split, only to have Steinbrenner alter it later, at Messersmith's request, to 50 for the pitcher, 40 for the Yankees and 10 for Osmond.

In his testimony, however, Osmond explained that he agreed to the split not on all endorsements but only on those obtained for Messersmith by Steinbrenner.

". . . it was my understanding, anyway," the agent testified, "that those endorsements and commercials and so forth would be on the ones obtained by Mr. Steinbrenner because he told me that he would personally obtain them . . ."

There was a similar misunderstanding, or disagreement in interpretation, between the parties on the interest to be paid on the $500,000 deferred payment. It was Osmond's understanding, he testified, that the 5 percent interest would begin accruing upon signing of the contract.

Steinbrenner, however, insisted that they had agreed that "the meter would start running on interest in the sixth year."

The matter of interest, as set down in the handwritten memorandum signed by Paul and Osmond at 1:30 A.M. March 28, was ambiguous at best. Here is the text of that memorandum:

"It is hereby agreed by the New York Yankees and Andy Messersmith that the following is agreed to:

Conditional upon Andy Messersmith passing a physical examination conducted by physicians engaged by the Yankees the following terms are agreed to:

Bronx, New York 10451

Attention: Mr. Gabriel Paul
President

Gentlemen:

On the date hereof, the undersigned (Player) has executed a Uniform Player's Contract and an Addendum thereto, with the New York Yankees, (Club), and this letter will confirm additional covenants and agreements by and between the parties to such Contract and Addendum, which, though not relevant thereto, nevertheless constitutes an integral part of the consideration inducing the parties to enter into and execute such instruments.

The undersigned agrees as follows:

1. For the seasons of 1976, 1977, 1978 and 1979, all proceeds received by Player from non-baseball commercial endorsements or whatsoever nature shall be divided as follows: 50% shall be received by Player, 40% by the Club, and 10% by Herb Osmond, as Player's Agent.

2. Player agrees that during the four year term of the Contract, he will abide by all rules and regulations promulgated by the Club, including, without limitation, those relating to dress, grooming and appearance.

Yours very truly,

John Alexander Messersmith

ACCEPTED AND APPROVED:
NEW YORK YANKEES

By _____ President

The unsigned side letter

1. Andy will sign a four year, no cut contract for $100,000 per year plus the following: $36,000 upon signing. In the 5th year $64,000.

2. Starting with the sixth year through the 19th a sum of $500,000 to be amortized at $35,000 yearly plus 5 percent interest on the unpaid balance to be paid annually with any unpaid balance to be paid at the termination of this agreement.

Any endorsement or sponsorship revenue to be split 40 percent to the Yankees, 60 percent to Andy out of which he will pay Herb Osmond 10 percent."

A Basic Outline

"As we signed that," Paul testified at the hearing, "I looked at my watch, I said, gee, it's 1:30. And I said, this is kind of a historical thing, and all of us said, let's put the time on it."

It might have been historical to Paul, but as far as Osmond was concerned, he testified, "this was just a basic outline of the items we were going to put in the contract."

When that memorandum was translated into a contract, the two-page addendum included the $100,000 salary, the additional compensation of $36,000 now and $64,000 later and the outline of the deferred payments. The payment schedule, however, began with an unpaid balance in 1981 of $500,000.

Osmond felt that should have been $625,000 including five percent interest from now until 1981.

Furthermore, the no-cut clause in the addendum didn't guarantee Messersmith or his heirs all the money called for in the contract, no matter what happened to him. It allowed for the money only if the Yankees released him, not if he couldn't pitch because of injury or death.

The Yankee officials kept telling Osmond to rewrite that no-cut provision any way he desired, but he never did.

Instead, he appeared at Steinbrenner's office on March 30, while the team owner was getting a haircut, and delivered a note to Paul that said, "Dear Sirs: Insomuch that Paragraph 4 [the no-cut] of the addendum to the contract offered to me for Andy Messersmith is not according to the terms agreed upon, verbally and in a memo signed by us jointly, our offer to you is hereby withdrawn."

Left unmentioned by Osmond were the other provisions omitted from the addendum. One of these was the no-trade clause that Paul testified was never mentioned.

Osmond, on the other hand, said a no-trade provision had been agreed to ("we discussed how it was that Andy ever became a free agent in the first place over that very issue of no-trade.")

Why didn't Osmond go back to the Yankees and find out why the contract didn't include the terms he felt they had agreed to?

In Messersmith's testimony, he mentioned how he had asked Osmond if these matters had been discussed and understood and the agent said they had.

". . . well, then that was it, I said," the pitcher testified. ". . . it was my feeling again, that ever since the Appellate ruling, that we hadn't been getting the kind of fair offers that, again in my opinion, I thought we should get. And I had heard some things that were to the effect that the owners weren't exactly dealing in good faith. . . . When this happened, that is exactly what I felt.

"I thought last, here we go again, and I just said, hey, get out and leave them a message that you can get in touch with him through his office, through your office."

The Yankees never did contact Osmond or Messersmith, except through a telegram saying they would "resort to appropriate legal remedies" to enforce the alleged agreement.

Steinbrenner saw Messersmith for the first time at the hearing. During questioning about dress codes and appearance, Moss, the association counsel, said to the owner. "I would ask that you take a good look at him and tell me if his mustache and his hair would meet the Yankees' dress code, grooming code."

"I think his mustache is very neat," Steinbrenner replied. "As long as it is kept neat—I would prefer it were a little shorter, but it is neat. His hair is well groomed. The question is, if he could keep it well groomed like that under a baseball helmet when he is sweating and pitching, fine.

"Only, I say the only thing that I would ask is that he be able to keep it neat and groomed when he is playing."

Posey Is Expected At F-5000 Opener

By PHIL PASH

The Formula 5000 and Trans-Am series will open at Pennsylvania's Pocono International Raceway on Sunday, May 9, and both races may have some eyebrow-raising entries.

About Sam Posey is expected to return to Formula 5000 competition in a car prepared by Jack McCormack and sponsored by several doctors in the Los Angeles area. George Follmer may be on hand for the Trans-Am race in a new Porsche Turbo Carrera RSR entered by Vasek Polak, a West Coast Porsche dealer and racing team owner. Polak, according to the Porsche factory, ordered five new cars, and a second team car may be available for Hurley Haywood.

Al Holbert of Warrington, Pa., will have his own Turbo Carrera for the Pocono race and the remainder of the Trans-Am series.

Two factory Jaguar XJ 5.3 coupes are seeking the European championship for Touring Cars with an all-British cast. Ralph Broad of Broadspeed Engineering is the team manager, with Derek Bell, David Hobbs, Andy Rouse and Steve Thompson as drivers. Jaguar's official return to racing has caused a stir in England.

Paula Murphy, who has driven a variety of cars to world speed records, will use one of Richard Petty's Dodges on May 1 when she tries to smash her women's closed-course speed mark at Alabama International Motor Speedway in Talladega. She set the mark of 171.499 miles an hour in 1971. The car she will drive carried Petty to the 1974 Grand National championship, and has been outfitted with a 426-cubic-inch Chrysler hemi engine.

Road America in Elkhart Lake, Wis., has announced a second Formula 5000 race for Aug. 29 under a handicap format similar to what was used last year for the Road America 252 Handicap. The 1975 handicap race featured Can-Am and Trans-Am type cars. This year's event will feature the 5000 machines. Road America's regular Formula 5000 date is July 25.

Goodrich's decision to end its sponsorship of the International Motor Sports Association's Racing Stock series came "because of new IMSA rules that would allow the series to become a competitive battleground in which tiremakers will engage in open and costly competition to post wins for their tires."

"In our opinion, this is contrary to the original objectives," added Robert A. Eisentrout, the Goodrich vice president, who announced that the company would not renew its contract with IMSA when it expires June 30.

The Goodrich Radial Challenge Series is to become known as the IMSA Radial Challenge Series on July 1.

Woman Passes Her First 'Test'

32.52 registered by Johnny Rutherford in a McLaren-Offy, an average speed of 166.1 m.p.h.

But she was the 17th fastest of all and the only faster rookie, Gary Allbritain, crashed his Eagle into the wall and out of the $75,000 race.

With another car out of the race because of a blown engine, Miss Guthie needs to be faster than only three drivers in tomorrow afternoon's qualifying session to get into the race.

"She looks nice," said Billy Vukovich, an admitted "male chauvinist pig" as Miss Guthrie drove by.

"Yeah, she looks nice and slow," added Vukovich, who promised to eat his size 7 hat if Miss Guthrie, or any woman driver, does well on the United States Auto Club's Championship Trail."

Bobby Unser, who won the season's opening race at Phoenix, where Arlene Hiss became the first woman to drive in a USAC event, stayed somewhat aloof from the battle of sexes that has spiced auto racing this season.

He repeated his criticism of women drivers "without credentials" and said "this shouldn't be a race drivers' school." But he refused to say anything about Miss Guthrie's performance today. The two-time Indianapolis 500 winner, who said he's been besieged by angry letters "from women libbers" over his comments on Mrs. Hiss and Miss Guthrie recently, would only say, "No comment."

Unser had his own problems, anyway. After doing a 160.1 m.p.h. lap in his Eagle-Offy, he lost an engine.

The second fastest man today was Tom Sneva, driving Roger Penske's McLaren at 165.6 m.p.h., after taking Miss Guthrie and three other rookies around the track as part of USAC's normal rookie indoctrination. Sneva, who gave up a teaching career to go racing welcomed the opportunity to serve as an instructor again and made it clear he considered women rookies the same as male rookies.

He said that from the type of questions Miss Guthrie asked — "Where are the yellow lights, the shutoff points, the rough spots?" — he could tell that she was a racing driver with 13 years' experience, albeit in smaller and slower cars.

Sneva tested here last week at the same time as Miss Guthrie. "I couldn't tell if it was a girl in the car or not," he said.

Wood, Field & Stream: Green Turtle in Danger

By NELSON BRYANT

A gentle denizen of tropical seas, the green turtle is dangerously overexploited.

There are other sea turtles whose flesh, eggs or shells are prized by man, but the green, which may reach 900 pounds and 50 years of age in the wild, is the most favored as food. It is the basis of the turtle steaks and turtle soups one finds on menus in Florida and the Caribbean.

According to Dr. Archie Carr of the University of Elorida, one of the world's experts on the species, the fishing pressure has increased enormously in recent years.

The main green turtle colony left in American waters is one that nests on a 20-mile beach in Costa Rica on the Caribbean side near the mouth of the Colorado River. For more than two decades, Carr has been working with that nesting colony, assuring with the aid of the Costa Rican Government, the Caribbean Conservation Corporation and a series of National Science Foundation grants, that the turtles are fully protected during the egg-laying time, which is from July to September, and also tagging the mature females as they come ashore to deposit their eggs in the sand.

From his tagging, Carr has learned that after nesting about half of his turtles return to a vast shallow area of flats off Nicaragua, known as the Miskito Cays, which he describes as the "best green turtle pastures in the world."

Until Nicaragua's ousting of almost all foreign turtle boats from the Miskito Cays, they were the region where most of the turtle men from the Cayman Islands fished. By the early 18th century, the Caymanians and others had exhausted the supply of turtles off their islands and off the grounds south of Cuba and were working the Miskito Cays.

Most of the harvesting of his colony comes from the Nicaraguans themselves, says Carr, who adds that they now have three factories and slaughter and process turtles.

"We have found," says Carr, "that we are keeping the production of baby turtles up in our colony, but the length of time a turtle can remain alive and contribute to the population is growing less and less because of heavy fishing."

Today, turtles are usually taken in nets. Earlier, harpoons were also used and it was also a common practice for men to kill the female turtles on the beach and to take their eggs as well.

Perhaps one quarter of the green turtles from the Costa Rican colony that do not go to the Miskito Cays journey to Venezuela and Colombia, and the remainder are strung out all the way to Florida with a few reaching Jamaica and Martinique.

Carr believes that a female green turtle is ready to lay eggs somewhere between six and eight years after birth. There are reproductive cycles of two, three and four years, and a female can shift from one to the other. In a producing year, a female nests five times, producing about 100 eggs at each sitting. The hatching turtles are subject to enormous predation from birds and animals while making their way to the water, and from fish until they grow larger.

The green turtle played an important role in opening up the Caribbean to trade and colonization, for after capture, they can be turned on their backs on deck. Doused occasionally with water and given shade they remain alive a long time in that state. They are transported in that manner today. In addition to being immobilized on their backs—where they cannot right themselves—the front and rear flippers of each turtle are bound together. If a turtle's flippers are left free, he will injure other turtles about him or will actually fray his flippers to a bloody mess by beating them on his stomach and will die from loss of blood.

Carr has no objection to Caribbean natives hunting green turtles for their own consumption, but fears that time has long gone, that the popularity of green turtle meat in restaurants and an increasing tourist business simply means more exploitation.

On Grand Cayman there is a green turtle farm called Mariculture, which has had good success in raising green turtles from eggs obtained in Nicaragua. They have not succeeded in achieving natural reproduction of the species in captivity. In the wild, perhaps 1 percent of the eggs survive. Mariculture's survival rate has been 85 percent. The firm also releases no less than 1 percent of turtles it raises to the ocean.

It is Carr's feeling that there should be no international market for turtle meat. He says that if turtle farms could produce a domesticated green turtle easily identifiable—in processed form as well as alive—from all wild kinds, all would be well. But this hasn't been done, and, says Carr, as long as the farms keep increasing the demand for turtle meat, they are, in effect, raising the price on the head of each wild turtle. "A person who feels the green turtle is in danger—and it is—has to be against this, or he isn't logical, and Lord knows I love turtle meat," Carr says.

"The green turtle is," Carr continues, "a limited, littoral resource, not an oceanic resource."

It will not be long before wild green turtle meat or soup will no longer appear on menus in the United States, says Carr, because it is about to be listed as a threatened species and will be banned from importation and sales in this country.

at first. White also stole second, but was stranded.

The Royals tied the game in the fourth on a single by Al Cowens, who scored on a single by Fran Healy (Cowens was running on the pitch. Healy came around on a hit by Fred Patek.

But Chris Chambliss put the New Yorkers back on top in the fourth. Hitting safely in his eighth straight game, he got a pop double, reached third when Cowens dropped Oscar Gamble's fly in right and scored on Lou Piniella's sacrifice. Gamble dashed home on a squeeze bunt by Nettles, and the Yankees led, 4-2.

But the royals cut that edge to 4-3, and then, helped by some plays guaranteed to have upset Manager Billy Martin, picked up five runs in the seventh to take an 8-4 lead.

It started with an infield double, of all things. Tidrow watched while Munson camped under Jim Wohlford's pop in front of the plate. But Chambliss at first ran in yelling for the ball, and Nettles finally dived for it. No one got it.

Five hits followed and the runs started pouring in, including one by Al Cowens, who trotted home while Patek was in a rundown between first and second and neither Mason nor Chambliss thought to throw home.

Unperturbed, the New Yorkers came back with four in their hlf of the seventh to tie the game at 8-all. In this uprising, Piniela stretched his batting streak to nine games.

The game, taking on the characteristics of a minor classic, continued to dumbfound the 16,034 fans in the eighth. The Royals took the lead, only to lose it while they were still on the field.

Wohlford singled, went to second on a walk and scored on Mayberry's hit. That is, he thought he had scored. But he had missed the bag at third. The Yankees appealed and Wohlford was called out.

Mets Call Astrodome A "House of Horrors"

By PARTON KEESE

Special to The New York Times

HOUSTON, April 24—Tonight it was Tom Seaver's turn to enter the House of Horrors. That's what the New York Mets call the Astrodome, and that's where the Mets have lost to the Houston Astros 71 times in the last 15 years, winning only 34.

Seaver had started three games for New York this season for a total of 20 innings, but had only one decision, a victory, mostly because of bad luck and bad support. This time he had to enter the air-conditioned jinx knowing his best outfielder, Del Unser, would not play and that his best hitter, John Milner, was still a question mark.

Unser had a swollen right elbow, the target that Lynn McGlothen aimed at, hit and was part of the reason the Cardinal pitcher was fined $300 and suspeded for five days. Milner, though able to pitch hit, found his pulled thigh muscel a day-today proposition.

Opposing Seaver was Larry Dierker, a right-hander, with a 2-1 won-lost record. Though the Astros had won nine games, more than any other team in the major leagues, Dierker said he didn't think Houston would win the pennant.

"That doesn't mean we can't," he added quickly, "or that we won't try as hard as we can. But we are in the same division as Cincinnati, and that's a tough team."

There were at least two good reasons the Astros were virtually tied for first place in the West. One was their admitted ability to win at home, where they had played all but three of their first 15 games. They lost all of their games on the road.

The second reason was Cesar Cedeno, their center fielder, who was off to a good year. For a career .300 hitter like Cedeno, a good season would be terrific to most other people. To begin with, he had hit safely in his last eight contests for a .419 clip, with four homers and 12 runs batted in.

Cedeno knocked in all three runs last night, beating the Mets with a home run, a single and a run-producing grounder. Jerry Koosman, who had pitched a powerful three-hitter for six innings but ended up with his first loss of the year, called Cedeno "a natural talent and strong guy" who can hit your best pitch out of the park. That's just what Cesar did."

Manager Bill Virdon of Houston also thought Cedeno was primed for a good year. So did Cedeno, who said, "It's time for me to have a good year. I'm relaxed, I'm confident and I put all my problems behind me."

No one ever denied Cedeno lacked confidence. Ask him who he thinks is the best player in league, and he says, "I am." Ask why he hasn't proved it, he answers, "Why do you sometimes misspell a word?"

Then he explains: "The reason people expect me to do well is because I have the potential. I don't like to say this, but there is probably only one player in the league who can compete with me in talent, and that's Joe Morgan [Cincinnati Reds' second baseman].

"And because Morgan has played in a World Series, I'll say he has outdone me. I don't care who is better, though, as long as I do a good enough job to help my team win a pennant. I'm only 25, and all I want is to play in a World Series.

"Then there won't be any question who's the best player."

Reds Top Expos in 11th, 6-4

MONTREAL, April 24 (AP) — Dave Concepcion's two-run single in the 11th inning gave the Cincinnati Reds a 6-4 victory today over the Montreal Expos.

Dan Driessen led off the 11th against Don Carrithers with an infield single and Johnny Bench was safe when the Expo third baseman, Larry Parrish, bobbled his grounder. Mike Lum bunted the runners ahead and Cesar Geronimo was intentionally walked to load the bases. Concepcion then delivered his single to right-center field. The victory went to Rawly Eastwick, his first.

Montreal took a 1-0 lead in the first on Gary Carter's run-scoring single to left off Pat Zachry and made it 2-0 in the fourth on Pete Mackanin's sacrifice fly.

The Reds got a run in the fifth on Lum's homer, then went ahead 4-2 in the sixth on Joe Morgan's three-run blast off the starter, Steve Rogers. A walk to Pete Rose and Ken Griffey's single preceded Morgan's third homer.

Mackanin's single gave the Expos a run in the bottom of the sixth and they tied it 4-4 in the seventh on Ellis Valentine's first homer of the season, a leadoff shot against Pedro Borbon.

Rangers 5, Tigers 4

DETROIT, April 24 (UPI)— Roy Smaley's sacrifice fly capped a two-run Ranger ninth inning against the Tigers' ace reliever, John Hiller, today as the Rangers posted a 5-4 victory over the Tigers.

With runners on first and third, Gene Clines blooped a single to right with the ball rolling under the glove of Rusty Staub for an error, enabling Jeff Burroughs to score and Dave Moates to go from first to third. Moates scored on Smalley's sacrifice fly, putting Texas ahead, 5-3.

Ben Oglivie got one of the runs back for Detroit with a pinch-hit homer in the ninth, but Steve Foucault finished the game without any more scoring.

Indian Hurler Halts A's With 2-Hitter

By DEANE McGOWEN

As far as 21-year-old Dennis Eckersley is concerned, the Oakland A's are just another ball club. Last year, he was the only Cleveland pitcher to beat the A's in 12 games. Last night in Municipal Stadium, the right-hander held the powerful A's to two hits in pitching the Indians to a 3-0 victory.

Despite the 46-degree temperature, Eckersley struck out 10, walked two and yielded only a second-inning single to Billy Williams and a one-out, ninth-inning single to Claudell Washington.

Buddy Bell furnished Eckersley with the first run when he doubled in Frank Duffy in the third with two out. In the fourth, Charlie Spikes tripled across George Hendrick, who had singled, then scored on a sacrifice fly by Doug Howard.

Eckersley, who had failed to get past the third inning in his first two starts this season, returned to the form that made him the American League's top rookie pitcher last year. Vida Blue, who has not defeated the Indians since July 21, 1974, was tagged for seven hits in losing his second game.

Eckersley was in complete charge as he recorded four strikeouts in the first two innings. The victory was Cleveland's third straight and the shutout was the first against Oakland in 66 games. The A's had gone 33 games on the road without being blanked.

The A's defeated the Indians 10 of 12 times last season. Both Cleveland triumphs were engineered by Eckersley, who lost to Oakland in his only other start against the A's and who finished with a 13-7 won-lost record for his rookie season.

Baseball Roundup

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Tigers 7, Rangers 6

AT DETROIT—Willie Horton hit a three-run homer to cap a 5-run second and Rusty Staub delivered a sacrifice fly with one out in the seventh to score Alex Johnson with the deciding run. John Hiller picked up his first victory in three decisions with 2 1/3 innings of relief. He has appeared in six of the Tigers' nine games. Ron LeFlore, saying the tears would come later, played the entire game in center field for Detroit and got three hits after learning that his younger brother had been shot to death earlier in the day.

Brewers 4, Angels 2

AT MILWAUKEE — Milwaukee rallied for three runs in the last of the eighth, two scoring on a throwing error at shortstop by Orlando Ramirez. California had taken a 2-1 lead in its half of the inning when Bobby Bonds hit his first homer of the season. Jim Slaton scattered eight hits in 8⅓ innings and raised his record to 3-1. Eduardo Rodriguez relieved him in the ninth. Henry Aaron lifted his batting average to .345 in collecting three singles in three trips to the plate.

Red Sox 9, White Sox 2

AT CHICAGO—Home runs by Carlton Fisk and Carl Yastrzemski — a three-run blow — helped Luis Tiant win his third straight game. Tiant yielded eight hits, walked one batter and struck out two in eight innings before giving way to Tom House. The victim of Boston's attack was Wilbur Wood. The knuckleball pitcher was battered for 12 hits and all nine Boston runs in 6⅔ innings. It was his second loss in four decisions.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Expos 5, Reds 4

AT MONTREAL—Pete Mackanin's two-out single with the bases loaded in the eighth scored two runs and a third run scored on an error by Dave Concepcion as the Expos rallied after the Reds scored three unearned runs in the seventh to take a 4-2 lead. Don Stanhouse earned his first triumph and Jack Billingham, also in relief, suffered the loss, bringing his record to 1-2.

Braves 6, Phillies 5

AT PHILADELPHIA—Tom Paciorek singled to start a five-run ninth, then drew a walk off Tug McGraw—the sixth of the inning—to force home the deciding run. Vic Correll doubled in two runs during the rally, which helped give the victory to Bruce Dal Canton (1-0). McGraw's record is 1-2. Larry Bowa drove in two Philadelphia runs and Mike Schmidt, whose home-run string was snapped after seven in four games, drove in another.

Padres 5, Cardinals 1

AT SAN DIEGO — Randy Jones, a 20-game winner in 1975, pitched a four-hitter to become the major leagues' first four-game victor and Dave Winfield drove in four runs. Jones, the lefthander who won the National League's earned-run average championship last season with a 2.24 mark, lowered his 1976 average to 1.85 as he struck out seven Cardinals and walked two. Lou Brock got three St. Louis hits, singles in the first, seventh and ninth innings.

Giants 7, Pirates 3

AT SAN FRANCISCO— Homers by Derrel Thomas and Gary Matthews, his second of the game, produced the three decisive runs in the seventh. Bobby Murcer singled after Thomas's homer, which snapped a 3-3 tie, and scored on Matthews's fifth belt of the season. John Montefusco (3-1) went seven innings, gave up eight hits and three runs. Manny Sanguillen had three singles and a double for Pittsburgh.

Cubs 4, Dodgers 3 (11 inn.)

AT LOS ANGELES—Consecutive, two-out singles by Jerry Morales, Andy Thornton and Manny Trillo in the 11th inning gave the Cubs a 4-3 victory over the Dodgers.

Trillo's hit, his third of the game, scored Morales from Third with the winning run.

Paul Reuschel, the last of five Cub pitchers, got the victory while Al Downing, last of four Dodger pitchers, took the loss.

Julie Anthony at 28: Net Tour 'Phantom'

By LENA WILLIAMS

Women in Sports

On a mild, sunny afternoon in New York City, as tennis buffs hurried to find the nearest vacant courts, two Columbia University coeds were walking across the upper Manhattan campus talking about tennis, a subject that is becoming popular among college students. "I watched the final of the Virginia Slims tennis tournament," said a slender young woman who was carrying several books in her arms. "Julie Anthony was the commentator."

"Didn't she once play tennis?" asked her companion.

"I think she did," said the first woman.

Miss Anthony, who says she is considered the "phantom" of the women's tennis tour, admits few people know that she is currently playing on the Women's Tennis Association Futures Tour or that she once played with the Philadelphia Freedoms of World Team Tennis, when Billie Jean King was also a member of that team.

"Several of the players knew I was playing tennis in between my graduate studies at U.C.L.A.," said Miss Anthony during a telephone interview from her home in Los Angeles. "I would disappear for two years, then pop up at Wimbledon or Forest Hills or in Istanbul."

She is only a dissertation away from her Ph.D in clinical psychology, but has extended a leave of absence she obtained from the school until October in order to compete in more tournaments.

And while Miss Anthony said she never looked upon tennis as a prime endeavor, she loves the travel, the money, and the freedom she is afforded by the game, and hesitates to think of a time when she will work behind a desk, instead of a tennis net.

At 28, she believes that not only did she come along at the wrong time, but she never received the proper coaching needed to become a top-ranked player.

"When I was coming up, you didn't have W.T.T. or Virginia Slims or $50,000 first-place purses," said the California native who began playing tennis when she was 8 years old. "I played on the Stanford women's tennis team, but we didn't have a coach like the men's team had. Everything we learned, we learned on our own."

It wasn't until she joined the Freedoms in 1974 that her game improved, as a result of the coaching of Billie Jean King.

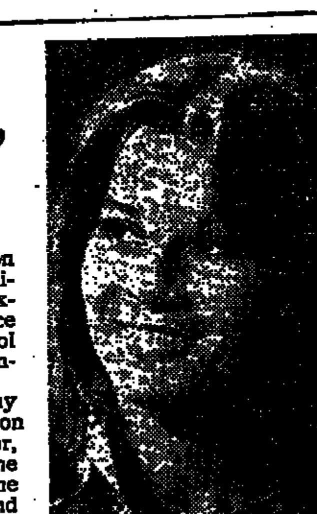
What were the miracles taught by Mrs. King?

"Well, one thing was how to play specific points," said Miss Anthony. "For instance, she told me that I have to play a 30-40 on my serve differently from a 40-30. And I didn't know how to play different patterns on different surfaces or the angles to use to cut off an opponent's options.



White Whale Graphics

Julie Anthony

She recently worked for CBS as a color commentator for women's tennis. When she found herself in a position of broadcaster, spectator and critic, a nervous stomach was her initial reaction.

And now she is concentrating on getting her game and her name to the top. She will compete in the Family Circle Cup tennis tournament in Jacksonville, Fla., next week, and she hopes to play for the San Diego Friars of W.T.T., as well as qualify for Wimbledon or Forest Hills.

Entry Rolls Are Shorter at Two Events

By WALTER R. FLETCHER

News of Dogs

The Trenton Kennel Club has had its ups and downs. Next Sunday, it is staging its 47th show, and numerically it is down. Although Trenton had drawn 3,080 dogs, a robust enough entry for most clubs, it is nothing for the Jersey organizations to brag about, for it is 577 under last year. Its companion show, Bucks County, on Saturday, also has suffered a drop, and with 2,623, is down 304 from 1975.

This is rather surprising, for most events have increased their entries this year. International, in Chicago, was up 188 to 3,206 and Old Dominion, eight days ago in Reston, Va., moved ahead 278 to 3,129.

Indeed, Trenton may slip out of the top ten this year. As recently as 1972, the Jersey club had the largest show in America. The next year it dropped to third, but in 1974, with 4,002 dogs, it was No. 2, trailing Santa Barbara by 286. Last year, Trenton had 3,657 and was No. 4. The weather didn't help, for it rained all day and many of the rings were ankle-deep in water and mud.

Since 1968, the show had been held at Washington Crossing State Park, which was long on history but short on drainage. Many autos were bogged down last year and had to be hauled out. In just two years, Trenton's entry has shown a 25 percent decline.

Perhaps the new site, Mercer County Park, at Edinburgh and Old Post Roads in West Windsor Township, may prove more popular and win back some of the exhibitors. However, the club's premium list doesn't help to win friends and influence people, for it fails to give directions to reach the grounds and there's no guide to motels in the area.

Both Bucks and Trenton got under way at 9 A.M. The Jersey show will have 21 rings for breed judging and five for obedience. Mrs. James A. Gribbin, the club president, has arranged for 46 judges from 18 states and England. The park may be reached from the New Jersey Turnpike, Exits 7A or 8.

The Potomac Skye Terrier Club drew 48 dogs for its specialty, and Olga Smid, who owned many top Skyes in Czechoslovakia until she emigrated in 1968, chose the Gleanntan Kennels' Ch. Gleanntan Coming at Ya for her best of breed. . . . Joan Thurlow's Pembroke Welsh corgi, Thurlow's Little Lizajane, U.D.T., led a field of 145 at the obedience trial to be high scorer and winner of the combined honors. . . . Orpha Curry's homebred, Ch. Crystalbrook Sean's Pawn, was fourth in the Timonium working group, no small achievement for a smooth collie.

Ch. Roderick of Jenmist, the Sealyham terrier Michael Weissman and his mother, Mrs. Florence Weissman, imported from Britain, showed the way at Terre Haute, Ind., for his 11th best. Since he started last November, Roddy has been out 19 times and captured 11 groups. . . . A Doberman pinscher, Ch. Liquorish The Ron Rico, owned by Grace and Jeff Joffe, had a double in Florida, taking the major awards at Fort Lauderdale and Fort Myers. . . . Don and Jackie Gibson's keeshond, Ch. Japar Ace-in-the-Hole, trumped the field at Columbus, Ohio. . . . Ch. Westfield Cunomorus Stone, owned by Barbara and Mrs. Charles Westfield, won her 22d bulldog specialty at Delaware, Ohio.

Derby Week: Everyone Is a Horse Lover

it up, and you've got something going.

He readily conceded that Louisville was basically a midwestern manufacturing town. But, once again, that's during the rest of the year. During Derby Week, it's whatever dreamers want to think it is.

Stone did have some good news for the 115,000 horse lovers who are expected to show up at his cavalry post next Saturday. Most tickets are the same price this year as last: $10 for infield general admission, $115 for the most expensive reserved seats. The only increase this year is for clubhouse general admission: up to $15, from $10.

Like the event itself, the prices are big-league. So are the cab and hotel rates, which will take off next Thursday faster than either Honest Pleasure or Bold Forbes. As usual, natives with a conscience will speak out against what they call the "annual orgy of greed and opportunism." But the merchants will be too busy ringing the cash register to hear them.

"We're not a major-league town," said a local bartender. "We've got one major-league event — the Derby."

In an effort to stretch out the action, Louisville has expanded its Kentucky Derby Festival to 10 days. It began yesterday with George Plimpton giving the main address at the traditional "they're off!" luncheon. The "Silver Horse Shoe" award went to C. V. Whitney, who has been trying unsuccessfully to win the Derby with various horses since 1931.

Today, the Derby Festival continued with The Great Balloon Race and the opening day of The Great Cycling Race. Before the Festival ends, there will be basketball tournaments, tennis matches, rock concerts, stage shows, the Pegasus Parade and The Great Steamboat Race.

To the victor goes the roses

On the racing scene, the Thoroughbred Breeders of Kentucky began distributing thousands of bumper-stickers reading: "Beat Honest Pleasure With a Kentucky-Bred." Bertram Firestone's colt, by What a Pleasure, was bred in Florida. Bold Forbes, by Irish Castle, was bred in Kentucky and bought by E. Rodriguez Tizol of San Juan, Puerto Rico. It is no secret whose side the Kentucky breeders are on.

While the horses and their trainers prepared for the final countdown, the party-goers were already off and drinking. Naturally, the mint julep stands out above the others the way a good Kentucky-bred should.

Every Kentuckian has an opinion on how a mint julep should be mixed, and two popular methods are offered here. The first comes from the Chamber of Commerce, the second from a recipe invented many years ago by a famous Louisville editor named Marse Henry Watterson. The instructions:

"Two days before your party, make a simple syrup, using one part cold water to two parts sugar. To each pint of syrup, add leaves of 12 sprigs of mint. Leave overnight in covered container, then strain through cheese cloth. Several hours before party time, place 12-ounce julep cups or glasses in freezer to frost. About 10 minutes before serving, fill with crushed or shaved ice and sprinkle with pinch of powered sugar. Add one teaspoon of minted syrup and two ounces of bourbon."

"Pluck the mint gently from its bed just as the dew of evening is about to form on it. Select the choicer sprigs only, but do not rinse them. Prepare the simple syrup and measure out half a tumbler of whisky. Pour the whisky into a well-frosted silver cup, throw the other ingredients out the window and drink the whisky straight."

By the time the band plays "My Old Kentucky Home," both methods figure to have gotten a thorough workout.

Proud Delta Returns $12 At Aqueduct

Shoemaker had cost both a prestigious victory.

That mistake occurred in the 1957 running of the Derby, in which Gallant Man seemed an easy winner as the field approached the finish. Shoemaker, as he was carried to the sixteenth pole by Gallant Man, thought he had reached the finish line and eased his mount up.

Bill Hartack, who rode Iron Liege, and who had been trailing Gallant Man, did not let up and guided his mount to victory, worth $107,950.

"Naturally, I got over that one a long time ago," Nerud said. "But a trainer never forgets one like that."

Dearly Precious Returns

Dearly Precious, last year's 2-year-old filly champion, is returning to New York to race tomorow. The Richard Bailey performer is the heavy favorite in the $35,000 added Prioress. Only three other 3-year-olds are listed to face her.

Dearly Precious has lost only once in her 10 starts. One of the triumphs was scored at Pimlico in the Flirtation earlier this month in the 1976 debut for the filly. Her setback occurred in first career start, in which she finished fifth after a slow getaway.

A $22,000 yearling bargani, Dearly Precious has earned $269,514. A victory in the Prioress would be worth $22,410.

Marquis Seeking Glory for France

By ED CORRIGAN

Back in 1913, a rider named Marquis D'Orgeix came to the National Horse Show with the French Equestrian Team and helped his squad win the Nations Cup.

Horse Show News

It was only the third time the event, the most important in international competition had been contested at the National, and in later years the French were to become one of the most powerful jumping teams in the world.

There is another Marquis D'Orgeix back in the French equestrian picture these days. He is the son of the rider in that 1913 show. He isn't riding anymore, though. Now he's a national trainer of the French team and has been assigned by the French Equestrian Federation, to get the jumping team back on the right track. He has had a French squad at the National the last two years. Last year most of his riders were young. But that is his system—get them young and bring them along.

Until 1974 France had not won a Nations Cup in 14 years. It went almost unnoticed in the United States because the French riders had not been to the National in more than two decades. The new Marquis D'Orgeix, whose first name is Jean, took over as trainer of the French squad in 1973, and in 1974 he managed to coach him to victories in Nations Cup competition at Lisbon, Madrid and Ostend, Belgium. So the French have made considerable progress.

Each nation that is a member of the International Equestrian Federation, (F.E.I.) the world governing body of the equestrian sports, is permitted to hold one Nation's Cup class each year. The exception is the United States, which, because of its size, is granted two—the Washington International and the National.

"Things had been very bad for the French jumping team for many years," the Marquis D'Orgeix said on a recent visit here. "I actually applied for the job because I had some strong theories about coaching a team. No, they did not come after me."

The Marquis D'Orgeix actually had been out of touch with the French Equestrian Federation for several years. He had been racing sports cars, going on safaris in Africa, writing books and winning aerial acrobatic championships.

"Most of my theory is made up of the fact that the rider is more important than the horse," he said through an interpreter. "You might say it is total and absolute control of the horse.

"This is something that was completely foreign to the French riders. In recent years, they had spent most of their time looking for super horses and, I think, neglecting their primary job of getting control of the horse.

"Now we have several good riders of international caliber in France and I'm trying to develop some new, young talent at our national training center in Samur.

"One youngster, I think, who has the potential to go far is Chris Cuyer. He is only 18 years old and when he started two years ago he won 21 first-place ribbons and 95 classes on six different horses. That's pretty good going for anyone."

The Marquis D'Orgeix shrugged off the Olympic Games as a relatively unimportant event.

"After all," he said, "it's only one competition that lasts for a few minutes every four years. The best riders don't always win.

"If I had to handicap the teams in the Olympics right now, I'd rate them West Germany, United States, France and Italy. I don't include Britain because its best riders are professionals and not eligible for the games."

Bob Kelly of Flyers Cited for Assault

TORONTO, April 23. (UPI)—The Ontario Attorney General's department today filed assault charges against Bob Kelly of Philadelphia and a 65-year-old fan for two separate incidents during the Toronto Maple Leafs-Flyers playoff game last night.

The 29-year old Flyer left wings was summoned to appear in court June 10 on charges of assault to cause bodily harm. The police said the charge arose from a complaint submitted by a Maple Leaf Gardens' usherette, Jan Brown.

Miss Brown alleged Kelly threw his gloves at her during a heated verbal exchange with Toronto fans while he was in the penalty box in the second period. George Crawford, 65, a spectator, was charged with common assault for allegedly elbowing Dave Schultz in a corridor outside the Flyers' dressing room.

... Monmouth Beach, Fair Haven, Red Bank and Rumson.

A number of marinas in the area offer facilities for transients, although reservations would be in order during OPSAIL. They include the municipal harbor in Atlantic Highlands; Sandy Hook Bay and Highlands marinas in the Highlands; Nauvon, Cove Sail and Tradewinds in Sea Bright; Channel Club and Atlantis in Monmouth Beach; Fair Haven Yacht Works in Fair Haven and the Molly Pitcher Inn in Red Bank.

Two popular anchorages are Horseshoe Cove just inside the tip of Sandy Hook—where the water is deep enough for large craft—and a small cove in the Navesink just beyond the point where it branches off from the Shrewsbury River.

If you trailer your boat to the region, there are several launching areas, the best, in terms of size and facilities, being at the Atlantic Highlands municipal harbor.

There are a number of good waterfront restaurants with dock space ranging from miniscule to good: Bahrs, Clam Hut, Long John's and Moby's in the Highlands; Fisherman's Wharf in Rumson and Molly Pitcher Inn in Red Bank. If you have land transportation, you might wish to visit the "in" place for the sailing crowd in Sea Bright, the Blue Water Inn. In Rumson there is the Flounder Inn, the Fromagerie

The Engine: It's Time to Go

Owners of small boats may do their own prelaunching check of hull and outboard motor if they so choose.

If your boat is a single-hulled fiberglass or aluminum craft, one way to check it for leaks is to turn it upside down and put a bright light under it at night which will reveal any loose rivets or tiny cracks.

It is also a good idea to scrub down the outside of a fiberglass hull with a detergent before this inspection. The scrubbing has a dual purpose: it may help reveal some hairline fractures that would otherwise be obscured by scum or dirt, and it also provides a smoother surface for faster running when underway.

If your outboard motor was properly cared for before being put away for the winter, there really isn't much to do except perhaps to clean and readjust spark plugs, but if it wasn't, here are some of the things to do, referring along the way to the owner's manual that came with it.

Check and clean the fuel filter. With the engine in an upright position, remove the lower unit drain plug and collect the oil that comes out. If the oil has a brownish tinge or is cloudy, possibly indicating the presence of water, examine the lower unit until you find the crack or faulty seal that allowed the water in. If there is a good deal of water in the gear case, the unit will have to be disassembled, cleaned and repacked with proper lubrication, for substantial amounts of rust may have formed.

If you have stored fuel in a tank over the winter, add fuel conditioner to it which will absorb accumulated moisture and also dissolve varnish and gum deposits.

If the propeller is bent or substantially damaged, it should be replaced, for a bad prop will cause excessive vibration and engine wear. Small nicks or rough spots in the blades can be eliminated with a draw file.

External motor parts that may need greasing now and again during the season include the steering linkage.

A simple but often neglected step involves going over the entire motor and boat, tightening all screws and bolts that may have loosened. Running lights should also be tested before the boat goes in the water.

When launching time arrives, it is wise to include a short shakedown cruise in your schedule before setting off for some distant picnic beach or fishing spot. If your engine is self-starting, make sure the battery has a full charge. Also, be certain—a check often forgotten—that the boat's drain plug is tightly in place. At the start, leave the boat alongside the dock with the engine running and after a few minutes of this look to see if there is a steady flow of cooling water coming from it. If no water is coming through, examine the intake at the bottom of the lower unit to see if it is obstructed. If there is no apparent obstruction and no water, the engine should be checked out by an experienced mechanic.

The engine should also be inspected while it is running, remembering to stay clear of the flywheel. Look for leaks in the fuel lines and carburetor, and water leaks at the cylinder head and exhaust manifold covers. Any sparks or arcing in the ignition system also means trouble.

Check the steering mechanism while the boat is at the dock, making sure you have a full swing and an easy, quick response both port and starboard.

With the engine idling, try reverse and forward. This should take place with a minimun of gear-clashing and jerking, and, then, before you set forth on your shakedown cruise, make certain that you have on the required safety equipment, including life preservers, on board.

Racing Crew Members a Breed of Their Own

By JEFF HAMMOND

Owning an offshore racing sailboat is a form of madness sometimes likened to standing in a cold shower and tearing up one-thousand dollar bills.

Hell, even a paint job on some 55-foot racers can cost $6,000.

Of course, after all the money is spent and the sleepless nights in soggy bunks and rough weather are over and one has won the race there is always the adulation of one's peers, notice in a few specialized magazines with limited circulation, and a few more lines in the local crab wrapper. Prizes are commonly silver-plated beer mugs or cake knives.

But if it is difficult to explain why someone would own and campaign an ocean racer, it is almost impossible to say why anyone would buy his own round-trip plane ticket to get to a race for the privilege of going to the foredeck in a gale to change sails, hoisted to the masthead to uncross halyards, or to cook below in a stuffy, cramped caibin with people getting sick all over the place. But they do it. In the middle of a race they promise themselves they'll never do it again, but as soon as they've been on shore for a few hours they are talking about the next one.

Why do they do it? Possibly the self-inflicted punishment cleanses the soul.

The crews on the large ocean racers all along the American coasts, the Caribbean, the Great Lakes, and across oceans are usually 10 to 15 in number with only the really big boats—those around 80 feet—taking on 18 to 22 crewmen. The owner, cook and navigator usually stand out on the larger boats with the port and starboard watches divided among the remaining crewmen. On every boat there is a watch captain, and on well-organized boats there will be other specialty jobs as well. For example a light, agile crewman might be designated the "point man," It will be his responsibility to go to the bow and do all the work that needs being done for a sail change. Another man will be singled out to work at the mast. He might be someone, who has especially good eyesight at night. Yet a third man might be relied upon as a tailor. Although it sounds as if there is no easier job aboard a boat than tailing a line from a winch, on the big racers nothing could be further from the truth. A two-second delay in the cast-off could ruin a tack permitting an override on the drum that could bring danger to the ship in certain situations and, placing a hand or finger in the wrong spot could instantly take it off, because of the tremendous forces on the winches, sheets and guys. A fourth man might be expected to grind the primary sheet winch and a fifth might be assigned to mainsheet trim, all depending on the size of the crew.

Some long races can be extremely arduous for crewmen not in top physical shape. If the race is in heavy weather, there will be relatively few sail changes, but moving around or simply sitting still requires a constant exertion of strength to keep from falling to leeward. Light air races can also wear out a crew because of a never-ending string of sail changes in an effort (usually unsuccessful) to have the right sail for the right wind condition.

Despite what many crewmen might like to believe, they are not signed aboard for their gay banter and limitless charm. They are taken aboard to work. And there is a lot of work to be done on the modern offshore racers where every one of scores of details must be right to get the optimum speed out of the boat. So, the owner of the offshore racer is a little like Tom Sawyer convincing his young friends how much fun it is to paint his fence. Some owners resort to serving good food on the boat and unlimited beer in port, to providing motel rooms instead of a berth on the boat and big dinners. A few even provide plane tickets, but the latter practice has been on the decline the last few years.

One of the hardest jobs on an ocean racer is that of the cook. Aboard the larger boats the cook must prepare and serve three meals a day at two sittings for from 10 to 18 men, in addition to washing dishes, preparing coffee and soup for the on-going watches in the middle of the night. On smaller boats where there is only a crew of six or eight the cook usually must be both chef and deckhand. Because of the motion of the boat, the poor ventilation and the smell of alcohol, most off*shore boats* use as cooking fuel, the cook is often the first to get green. It is not uncommon, just before a meal, to see the cook spring on deck to get a few minutes of fresh air. Today on many of the large ocean racers the cooks are women.

Most people worry about getting sick during an ocean race. They shouldn't really do this because it will only hasten the fact. I've been told that some of the sport's greatest names often get seasick, men like Ted Turner, Charlie Morgan, Bus Mosbacker and others, but I've never seen them sick. I have seen myself sick, and so it's comforting to know I might be among such prestigious company. Getting sick is part of going offshore, a part of what ocean racing is all about. It is always a threat, and when it happens the afflicted must react appropriately—which means join the lee rail Vikings—then get back to work. Those who drop off their watch to hit their bunk when sick are usually never asked back. One of the few valid excuses for missing a watch is a relatively serious injury.

But most of what a crew does is to carefully flake down, bag sails and stow them below and then drag them back up on deck and hoist them. The crews that concentrate the hardest on having the right sail up and trimmed in the right way will have the best chance at success. Most good crews pride themselves on making sail changes with precision and having their sails trimmed properly at all times no matter what the conditions, rain, sleet, gale, come what may.

Some races are easy and some are hard, but to veteran yachtsmen all but a few are easy and to the beginner all but a few are hard.

At night the on going watch members slowly roll out of their bunks and carefully put on their clothes and foul weather gear in the red glow of the night light. Because the cook, navigator and owner are sleeping, the change of watch is accomplished below in the red light, and the cabin easily be another pla another time. Four young men struggle the jostling boat and pull on their wool socks their rubber boots. check the safety devices harnesses and peer through the hatch to idea how bad it is on and say nothing. The is not unlike that of a ball locker room befo game, or maybe the in of a C-47 over France a load of paratro hooked up and ready to out.

Here's How to Avoid Owning a Boat

By HARRY V. FORGERON

Heredity and environment can exert powerful pressures on a man trying to avoid going into commission, but once again I have conquered both and will launch the boating season without a boat.

This battle with temptation has been going on for most of my 55 years, with little comfort from ancestry. Grandfather was a crusty Nova Scotia sea captain who was master of a fleet of schooners. Father was a first mate until another mate dry-docked him.

Environment? How would you like it if you were born a quarter-mile from the water on Cape Cod, spent most of your youth on the shores of a tidal pond there and lived in a coastal village on Long Island for 20 years? You'd have sand in your shoes and water in your boots, too.

There have been some close calls in the fight against owning a boat. Dad built a 14-foot sailboat in the basement one winter but he sold it while the No. I son was in North Carolina on military duty, thereby eliminating the danger of in*heritance.*

On another occasion, a co-venture with a Cape Cod pal produced a raft powered by one of mother's discarded bed sheets. But we failed to consult F. Spaulding Dunbar, the local yacht architect, about buoyancy and she sank in Chatham's Mill Pond be*fore we had clearly estab*lished ownership.

One of the worst hazards of my adult years has been exposure to winter boat shows. Two have required different defenses.

When the New York show is under way in January, my best move is to drive in the opposite direction to Captree State Park and board a party boat headed southeast of Fire Island Inlet to the codfish grounds. It may cost five times as much as admission to the New York Coliseum, but it cools subconscious enthusiasm and extremities with equal effectiveness.

The Long Island Boat Show at Nassau Coliseum in February is terrifying because of its convenient access and neighborhood exhibitors. This one shakes me up so much that I head for Sanibel Island in Florida, far from its tentacles, and stay there till it is over.

Early spring is a bad time, too. The nearby waterfront awakens, flounders come out of the mud and the need for access to flats, dropoffs and channels reachable only by boat becomes urgent. I solve this problem by asking my pal, Arnie Hartman, how much it cost him to get his cruiser out of winter storage and fitted out for the season. His answer usually sends me to Pon's in Seaford Harbor, a boat livery where I can play captain on $9 a day.

Late in May, I brace for the first of two annual attacks of striped bass fever, usually touched off by my automobile repairman, John Cromwell, who will tell me about the 43-pounder he caught from his boat under a Meadowbrook Parkway bridge. I have offset this by buying nearly $500 worth of surfcasting equipment and by avoiding conversation with Cromwell until the Fourth of July.

I have rationalized that if I spend $1,500 a year for the 10 years until my retirement to avoid buying a $20,000 boat, I'll be $5,000 ahead, not counting maintenance, storage and dockage.

So why am I worried?

I bought an outboard motor last spring in a moment of weakness and I'm beginning to cast covetous glances at cheaper transoms to hang it on. I think my no-ship is sinking.

Sandy Hook Is the Spot To Watch the Tall Ships

and What's Your Beef; and in Red Bank the Seafarer.

If you like to cook aboard, remember that lobstering is one of the Highlands' main industries, and fresh lobsters and steamer clams may be purchased in that community at Moby's and the Lobster Barn.

Sandy Hook is a well-known sportfishing spot, so bring a rod or two along. In early July striped bass are still around, although the peak of the run is over, and bluefish are usually abundant. Weakfish are plentiful in Sandy Hook Bay and fluke common, there and in the shipping lanes.

Cruises up the Shrewsbury and Navesink rivers are rewarding. They will take you past sumptuous homes, and wherever you go the green hills of the Highlands in the background will delight you, a nice change from the usually flat New Jersey shore.

There are three drawbridges in the region that could delay you: the Oceanic Bridge, the Highlands Bridge and the Sea Bright Bridge.

Special caution is advised in the vicinity of the last-named. The current runs swift, and each season a few sailing craft are dismasted there. This happens when *skippers misjudge the cur*rent while waiting for the bridge to open.

Stay in the channel, after entering the mouth of the Shrewsbury River from San*dy Hook Bay.* A sandbar is there, and masters who don't pay heed frequently end up aground waiting for a tide change, or, worse, a tow.

You might also consider visits to the historic Twin Lights of the Navesink, above Highlands and the Gateway Park. Take a spin up to the scenic drive above Atlantic Highlands for a fine view and perspective of the whole Sandy Hook area, as well as the New York skyline. You might even take an afternoon off to see thoroughbred racing at Monmouth Park.

Nautical 'Flea Markets' Can Save Boat Buyers Both Time and Mon

By JOANNE FISHMAN

If fitting out your old boat has got you down, don't give up the ship. Take it to a used boat show.

The shows, started last year by an enterprising Rhode Island sailor, are proving the nautical answer to the flea market.

This spring, Don Glassie of Yankee Boat Peddlers and Warren, R.I., has two shows planned. The Chesapeake Bay Yacht Bazaar will be at the West River Marina in Galesville, Md., for three days starting Friday. The next show, last year's prototype, is the Newport Yacht Bazaar scheduled for June 4, 5 and 6 in Newport, R.I.

Some 250 to 300 boats, sail and power, are expected at each show as well as a flea market of used marine equipment.

"Used boats, generally, are a bargain. Don't forget, a used boat is equipped, and to outfit a new one is unbelievably expensive," says Glassie. "And most boats today are well enough built so that age does not affect them drastically. Certainly, some boats can be overstressed, though, and this would affect their worth."

The shows are developing into a pot pourri, with a tendency to reflect local boating styles. For instance, the Chesapeake show will offer everything from a 65-foot Skipjack, crab skiffs and log canoes to an old Chris Craft rum runner and a Chinese junk.

At the Newport show, several lobster boats will be up for sale as well as the 99-foot schooner Freedom, the Alden-built yacht that cleaned up on the racing circuit in the 30's. There also will be a model boat reg

"We're getting a cross-section of boats, ning the gamut from di to large yachts. We're getting a number of boats, those that go style with rule changes, are high quality to with and can be a tr dous buy," says Glassie.

Individuals enter the est number of boats brokers and dealers on hand. In fact, one facturer is trucking ends up to the Ches show.

To facilitate buying selling, marine surv banks and insurance nies will be at both and a reasonable service will be available.

Further informatio available from Yankee Peddlers at 259 Water Warren, R.I.

Complete with a well-equipped galley, a two-burner propane stove, fresh sleeping bags, a head and ample deck space, these boats are clean and create quite a stir as they pull up to a local quay.

Getting to the point of departure at Angers poses no problem. It is a four-hour train or car ride, south and slightly west of Paris. Hiring a car in Paris is an advantage as the roads are extremely good and can take you through historic Chartres, or detour you to such lovely chateaux as Chenonceaux or Samur.

There are two abbeys that are well worth visiting especially if you can manage to attend Mass. "Abbaye N.D. de Timadeuc en Brehan-Loudeac" is a Cistercian Abbey. The other, the "Abbaye Saint-Pierre de Solesmes" is known for its architecture and sculpture.

For those hungering for a taste of real chateau living, there's the Chateau de Teildras that is now open to the public. Eighteen kilometers *from Angers at Cheffes-sur-*Sarthe, it accommodates 12 to 24 overnight guests luxuriously and boasts one of the finest cuisines in the area.

Once you enter the tree-lined road to the Chateau, you take a step back in time. Built of white tuffeau and slate, this elegant manor house and farm evokes images of knights in armor and the ladies of Camelot. It has been in the family of M. and Mme. du Bernard for the past 500 years. Exquisitely furnished and authentically refurbished, it has an elegant courtyard, luxurious guest rooms and a skillfully restored pebbled terrace that overlooks the rich and welcoming Anjou countryside.

Mayenne River

Soon the fantasy life at Teildras gives way to a more rigorous existence once aboard the houseboat. Civilization, propriety and artifice fall away as you leave Angers and cruise upstream on the narrow Mayenne River.

There, a world of verdant greens, blues, yellows, oranges and browns unfolds. The full palette of impressionist colors come to life in the lush Angevin countryside. "Les pescheurs," (fishermen), in their colorful Monet-like flat bottomed boats, line the *shore. Trees roll voluptuous*ly to the river while cows, heavy with milk, drink or graze along the shores.

The river is an undulating avenue of trees, bursting with foliage. Spiky lavenders lift their fingers to the sky. Tall cattails, heathers, morning glory and lily-pads abound on the winding river. All is tranquil, calm and serene. The atmosphere is unspoiled as the area has not yet been corrupted by tourism.

Part of the French Canal System, the locks are small and approximately 5 miles *apart. Ancient but still effi*cient, the narrow handhewn locks were built in the 1800's to keep the river at a steady level. The "eclusiers" (lockkeepers) are mostly women. They turn the large saw-toothed wheels that open the sluices to let the cascading water in or out. They are warm and friendly, often checking schedules to make sure they will be available to open the locks on your return.

An unexpected treat along the way is the appearance of several "becs." These are primitive hand-drawn barge-like ferries that carry cattle and produce across the river. And if you're lucky enough, .You'll meet "le passuer," (ferryman), at Pruille, a tall, wiry, handsome old man whose bright blue eyes, dancing out of his lean weather-beaten face, welcome you to a drink at his canteen on the shore.

Sloping hills, full of produce, identify the area, rich in fruit, wheat, maize, dairy products, wine and cattle. Magnificant farms, ancient water mills and chateaux loom up suddenly at the water's edge or in the plains.

Then there's the charming historic towns that dot the river, their rapier-like church towers heralding their presence. Here,( the hearty innkeepers and village shopkeepers welcome you to their world. Half the fun of the trip is stocking up on boat supplies. A visit to the epicerie (grocery), patisserie (bakeshop) or charcuterie (delicatessen) can be quite an experience.

Dinner or lunch is these towns is sheer delight. The food is excellent, the wine good, and the price is ridiculously cheap — sometimes $12 for a complete meal for four people, including wine.

A Charming Town

Perhaps one of the most charming towns along the way is Grez-Neuville. Here flower-decked stone houses rise up from the river and surround the Romanesque church in their midst. A small cascade provides a good swimming spot and the "Le Cheval Blanc," an inn, is excellent for a typically French meal, shower or sleep-over respite from the boat. Monsieur Hanol, the ruddy cheeked, robust and cheerful innkeeper, is an excellent host.

Loc'armor, the company that rents these houseboats, is located in St. Malo. They charter boats in Brittany, on the Canal de Nantes and in Loire country. Their address is 18, Rue de Dinon, 35400, Saint-Malo; Telex: 74154-Lucarmor Smalo.

We sawed this Boston Whaler into three pieces to prove to you Boston Whalers don't sink.
The reason is our unique foam-sandwich construction. This means our hull is actually a solid block of foam in a fiberglass skin. It's so strong we offer a 10-year structural warranty on every hull.

Good Anchorages, Beauty, Variety Await Those Who Sail the Sound

thunderstorms. They sometimes pack winds up to 50 knots. Many thunderstorms never bring winds over 25 knots, but it's best to get sails down because you can't be sure. Thunderstorms nearly always give warning if you watch the sky—usually half an hour or more. They're nothing to fear if you get your canvas off. They seldom last over half an hour, and usually produce awesome dramatic effects. We don't set out in the midst of one, but we don't stay in port because of a thunderstorm prediction either. We get caught in thunderstorms anywhere from three to six times a year.

Central and Western Long Island Sound average only two to three days per month of heavy fog (visibility ¼ mile or less). Heavy fog becomes more prevalent farther east. Block Island averages 12 days per month during July, Nantucket, 14 days per month. For navigation in Long Island Sound is facilitated by a well thought out combination of horns, bells, gongs, whistles, sirens, and radio beacons.

Pollution. Some of the Westchester shore is pretty murky, and a few Connecticut industrial harbors are dreadful, but the pollution problem will be solved. Secondary sewage treatment plants are being built all over the Sound. Long Island Sound will be cleaner. Meanwhile, nearly all of the Sound is safe for swimming. Connecticut cities all make weekly bacteria counts during the summer and few beaches fronting on the Sound have ever been closed.

Skin divers and swimmers bemoan the lack of clarity of the water in our Sound. The water is clearer on the Long Island shore than on the Connecticut side. One of the main reasons for this is the large amount of silt carried into the Sound from numerous small rivers and a few major ones that empty into it. Another cause of murkiness is the prevalence of plankton and algae which absorb or block light. However, these same nutrients feed a busy population in and at the bottom of the Sound. The supply seems inexhaustible. The bottom of the Sound is covered with everything from sponges to snails, sea lettuce to kelp, not to mention flounders, worms, crabs, clams, lobsters, whelk, mussels, and oysters.

Crowds. On summer weekends it is difficult but not impossible to find an anchorage all to yourself. Formerly deserted beaches now have houses on them. But there still remain so many places you can go, and so much you can do, that you couldn't touch all the bases in a single season.

Positive Aspects

Now let's consider some of the reasons why I wouldn't trade Long Island Sound. It is a relatively protected body of water, there is active fishing all over the Sound, and good swimming in many places. Some sections of shore are the most beautiful I've ever seen. It has more anchorages and more interesting harbors than anywhere else I've been. There are excellent seafood restaurants, good marinas, and worthwhile sightseeing.

I resent the sometimes-used appellation of "The Devil's Belt" for the Sound. We have waves, and if the wind is counter to the tide, a short, steep chop will develop, but anyone who complains about Long Island Sound's waves, has never seen real waves. I've been out in the Sound several times under near-hurricane conditions and it hasn't been all that bad.

I've sailed in the Sound in 60 knot winds twice in my husky 22-foot auxiliary sloop, with just a little handkerchief of a mainsail on both times. Wind velocities were reported by The New York Times, and verified by wind instruments aboard other boats. One of those boats was the Stamford Yacht Club Committee boat out there to start a race. Nobody showed up. My daughter Nancy and I crossed to Oyster Bay that day and encountered eight-foot waves on a beam reach. Those are the highest waves I've seen in western Long Island Sound, from the west. It wasn't bad going. I've seen 15-foot waves off Eaton's Neck during an easterly. Similar winds bring much rougher conditions in many other areas I've cruised. You get less waves for your wind in Long Island Sound. When the big wind is offshore, you get all that wind and no waves to speak of. The Sound is a protected body of water, and there are many large bays and rivers off the Sound where even the smallest boats can have a ball if conditions are too rough for their liking outside in the Sound.

The biggest thing Long Island Sound has going for it is the tremendous variety of interesting, well-protected, beautiful harbors and anchorages. I wrote a large book describing all of these, so it's difficult for me to describe many in a short article, but here are more than a score of popular places along the Connecticut shore with brief notes on their attractions. These are in geographical order, west to east, not in order of attraction:

1. Anchorages behind Great Captains Island and Calf Islands, off Greenwich. These are casual anchorages, nothing ashore except beaches, not protected in easterlies.

2. Stamford Harbor. Good anchorage behind the breakwater, or go dockside at Yacht Haven East, and have dinner at the Admiral Benbow, right at the marina.

3. Zieglers Cove, Darien. Just a beautiful anchorage, open from the east.

4. Norwalk Islands. Anchor behind Sheffield, land on Ram Island, Goose Island, or Cockenoe. Go up river to excellent marinas, dine at the Pier Restaurant or Skipper's Restaurant, both right on the river.

5. Saugatuck River. Crowded, but obtain a guest slip at one of the yacht clubs or gunkhole off the channel. The river is fun to explore and there are several excellent restaurants within walking distance.

6. Stratford, on the Housatonic River. We go once a year to Shakespeare Theatre, by boat!

7. Milford Harbor. Get a guest mooring or slip from the yacht club or one of the marinas up the Wepawaug River, or anchor behind Charles I. Walk the Green, explore Gulf Pond, swim off nice beaches.

8. Branford. Get a guest slip or mooring from the yacht club or one of the excellent marinas. Have a lobster roll at the good seafood restaurant at Bruce & Johnson's Marina. Explore the river. See the churches and homes around Branford Green, and the classic public library.

9. Thimble Islands. Not the best overnight anchorage, but sail through these unusual granite outcroppings. A coast of Maine effect at low tide.

11. Clinton Harbor. Dock at Cedar Island Marina. Explore Hammonasset River, swim off Hammonasset Beach.

12. Westbrook. Dock at Pilot's Point Marina up the Patchogue River, or Duck Island Marina, up the Menunketesuck River. Good anchorage behind Duck Island breakwater.

13. Old Saybrook. Luxurious Terra Mar for dockside, or North Cove for anchorage out. Good seafood restaurants at the docks.

14. Essex. Anchor either side of the channel or get a guest mooring from the yacht club or marina. Walk the charming old New England village. Have dinner at the docks, or at famous old Griswold Inn.

15. Up the Connecticut River, a beautiful ride. High spots are Hamburg Cove, Selden Creek, Gillete Castle, Goodspeed's Landing.

16. Niantic. Marinas and town are along the bay shore, but go up the narrow channel till you break out into one of the most scenic anchorages in the Niantic River.

17. New London. [slip] at Burrs or Ma[rina] Dine near the marina at Lighthouse Inn near [...] Beach. Swim off [...] Beach. Try charter [...] in The Race.

18. Anchorage behind [...] I. and Avery Point, Gr[oton]. Get a guest mooring [...] chor. Swim off de[...] Bushy Point Beach.

19. West harbor, F[ishers] Island, N.Y. Lovely, protected anchorage, [inter]esting village.

20. Mystic Harbor, [...] Mystic Seaport, Co[nnecti]cut's largest tourist a[ttrac]tion.

21. Stonington. Good [an]chorage behind the brea[kwa]ter, or good dockside at [...]son's. Walk interesting [his]toric Stonington Borough.

City Island Sailor Building Boat for Another Single-Handed Crossing

By FRANK EMBLEN

Jean Lacombe, who has sailed alone across the Atlantic five times in small sloops, has created what he says is, the first small sailboat designed from the keel up for crossing oceans and exploring barren shores.

Lacombe is now building the prototype of this exploring boat, the 24-foot sloop Yang, and he intends to sail her to Europe and back next spring. She incorporates the features that the single-handed sailor has found wanting in other boats during his 30,000 miles of offshore sailing, starting with his 1956 crossing to the United States from France. At that time his 18-foot Hippocampe, a double-ender, was the smallest boat ever to cross from east to west.

Lacombe, a transplanted Parisian who is in his mid-50's, lives alone surrounded by sailboats. There are stacks of French, British and American yachting magazines in his second-floor apartment in Gerber's Boat Works on City Island. Charts and photographs of Lacombe suntanned and bearded at the triumphant end of long sea passages cover the walls.

Outside, nestled among the several dozen boats in the yard, is Tigre, the 23-foot fin-keel sloop that Lacombe sailed to Plymouth, England, and the Azores in 1970. He made a 16-millimeter movie about the voyage called "Running Free."

For years Tigre served as the fleet of Lacombe's City Island sailing school, but now Tigre has been sold to help finance her master's new love, the Yang.

Lacombe, sipping sassafras tea and gazing out his window to where a brisk northerly speckled the Sound with white froth, spoke about Yang, whose partially finished hull lay in a large storeroom beneath the apartment awaiting his return.

"Like all good sailboats she will live in harmony with all the forces of nature," Lacombe said. "She will create energy and motion from these forces and she will pollute nothing."

It was this harmony, he explained, that inspired the name Yang, the positive or bright force in the ancient Chinese philosophy that interacts with the negative or dark force, Yin, to influence the destinies of all creatures and things.

"The wind, the sails, the keel, the resistance of the water and the ballast represent diverse elements that combine to propel a sailboat," Lacombe said. "A sailboat is the manifestation of the Yin-Yang philosophy."

Lacombe noted that faulty notions and faulty equipment that may masquerade as "the real thing" ashore or in quiet coastal waters are exposed as nonsense and junk during the rigors of an ocean crossing.

"A man in a sailboat in the middle of the ocean must put himself and his boat in tune, in rhythm, with his environment—the sea," Lacombe said. "There is no place for anything artificial . . . for anything that is untrue."

Lacombe has little patience for those who do not share his reverence for sailing and the sea. He abhors the image of sailboats — fostered by many ads—as sun-drenched toys drifting on a sky-blue sea as bikini-clad women loll about on deck.

"People get stupid ideas from these ads," Lacombe said. They take a sailing course to have fun—not to dedicate themselves to learning a wonderful thing. If the sun isn't shining, they don't come for their lesson."

Lacombe did not design Yang for such fair-weather sailors. She is a boat for those who share his lust for long-distance voyaging and are prepared for the hardships and risks as well as the exhilaration of sailing.

Yang utilizes a type of fiberglass construction—the C-Flex process — that requires no mold, Lacombe said. The boat can be built by an amateur for $5,000 in materials, according to Lacombe, while a finished boat her size would cost $10,000 or more.

Yang will have features that, according to her designer-builder, no one existing sailboat combines. They are:

¶A long, shallow keel that permits beaching. A long-distance sailor on a tight budget can careen the boat for painting and repairs and avoid yard charges for hauling out.

¶Inside ballast in pieces small enough to be removed by one man in the event of a bad grounding.

¶Beam of 8 feet allows Yang to be carried on a trailer without a special permit.

¶The C-Flex fiberglass process, which facilitates amateur construction and repair.

¶Flotation material makes boat unsinkable no matter how many times the hull is punctured.

¶Weight of keel will right Yang if she is knocked down by wind or wave.

¶A built-in, wind-operated, self-steering mechanism. The blade can be used as an emergency rudder if the main rudder fails.

¶A device that will allow one man to unstep and step the mast while at sea in the event repairs must be made.

Her Vital Statistics

While the Yang measures 24 feet overall, her waterline length is 21 feet, 9 inches. Draft is 2 feet 6 inches, displacement 3,000 pounds, ballast 1,200 pounds and sail area, 260 square feet. She will have four bunks, galley, cabin table, chart table and an enclosed head.

Lacombe plans to sell the rights to manufacture Yang to a company that will [sell] the boat in kit form. [He] hopes the royalties wi[ll pro]vide for his retirement. [La]combe earns money b[y giv]ing sailing instruction, lecturing, but most o[f his] income comes from [photo]graphy. He freelance[s and] is the official photog[rapher] of the Lycée Franc[ais of] New York, but beyond [main]tenance everything g[oes to]ward voyaging.

There are no pension[s] for the world's Jea[n La]combes.

"The majority conce[rn them]self with the welfare [of the] majority," Lacombe [said]. "People ask me what I [fear] most—storms, loneline[ss], hurricane—what I fear [is running] out of mo[ney]."

Asked what he saw hi[mself] doing in 10 years, Lac[ombe] replied: "Oh, I will [...] and sail around the w[orld]."

The perfect skiboat, scubaboat, runaboat, lifeboat, fishboat, funboat, dinghyboat, workboat.

You can do just about anything with Zodiac. Ranging in size from 8 to 19 feet, there are five Zodiac dinghies and ten runabouts to choose from. The largest takes up to 115 horsepower. One is perfect for whatever you do on the water. Their easy planing hulls will give you top performance on a lot less gas, and their ruggedness and reliability have been proven from the raging Colorado to the treacherous Antarctic.

Since Zodiacs are inflatable, they can be carried in your car and easily stored in small spaces such as a closet at home or on board a cruising boat. So, before you buy a boat for any purpose, contact us for your nearest Zodiac dealer or write for our descriptive brochure.

Modern Bass Boats Invading Eastern Lakes

By KEN SCHULTZ

Spawned in the South, the black bass fishing craze, with its fast, modern boats powered by big outboards and equipped with a dazzling array of electronic equipment, has reached the Northeast.

For example, on any weekend or holiday morning from mid-June through mid-October, Bob Baily's Tackle Shop in Somers, New York, will be bristling at 5 A.M. with fishermen nursing coffee and doughnuts, buying equipment, and relating fishing plans. From noon through dark these anglers will return, laden with black bass, both largemouth and smallmouth.

Such a scene is increasingly common in New York, New Jersey, and much of the northeast. In what was once the home of the trout—in fact, of the four northeastern states that have officially designated state fish, three are brook trout and one is landlocked salmon — the black bass is taking a firm hold in the hearts and creels of anglers.

A transplant to northeastern waters, this fish's reputation for aggression, finger-blistering runs, and broad-bellied rapaciousness has helped spawn a modern breed of angler and helped give a new focus to fishing techniques.

Today, dedicated northeast anglers are likely to be as scientific as fisheries researchers. Oxygen meters, depth finders: temperature gauges, live wells, electric motors, and other sophisticated gear have popped up in canoes, johnboats, and craft throughout the region. Specially-rigged, high-powered "bass boats"—formerly a southern phenomenon—have shown up on the larger waters and their popularity has found many a handyman fisherman adapting his skiff to "hawg hunting," as the lingo goes.

Less elaborately equipped, although no less enthusiastic, other fishermen spend countless hours in search of bass in thousands of ponds, reservoirs, lakes, and streams. Throughout the country, black bass anglers account for more than half of the hours spent fishing for fresh water species.

The federal Bureau of Sport Fisheries puts the number of 1974 northeastern fishing licenses and permits at nearly 3.2 million, a figure that has been increasing steadily every year. Since the notion persists that much of coldwater fishing (trout and salmon) is difficult to master, and since stream trout fishing is largely a put-and-take proposition, it was a natural for the newer, less tradition-bound angler to seek out bass—a fish that responds favorably to anglers offerings and reproduces well in a balanced environment. Nonetheless, it took an Alabama insurance salesman to get the movement going.

In 1968, Ray Scott founded a national fishing fraternity, complete with bimonthly magazine, and offered members a chance to participate in bass fishing tournaments for prestige, financial awards, and, as it turned out for some, lucrative endorsements. At $10 per man he immediately cultivated a following, predominantly in the south and southwest, that gobbled up badges, pins, patches, subscriptions, and general fishing information as fast as they could receive it. In just four years the organization—Bass Anglers Sportsman Society (B.A.S.S.)—had 100,000 fishermen in its camp and was beginning to be recognized throughout the rest of the country.

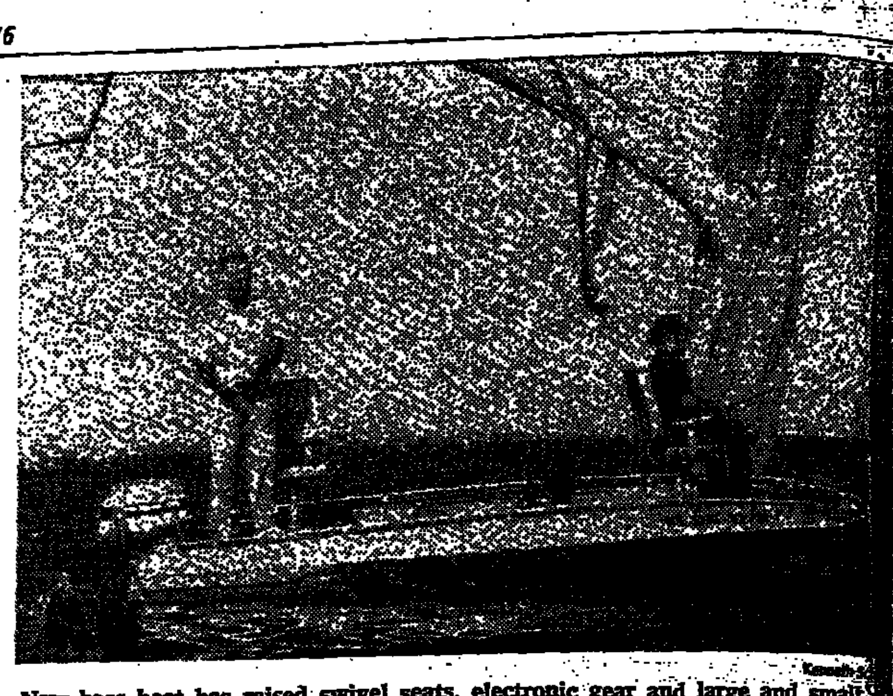
Today, B.A.S.S. claims a national membership of over 240,000, many of which are in the Northeast. Some of the latter are also members of state and local bass chapters, which have been formed in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Connecticut. The New York chapter for instance, which was established only two years ago as The New York State Federation of B.A.S.S., has already grown to over 4,300 members, comprising anglers from all areas of the state. Other organizations have sprung up, too, competing for the attention of bass men. Perhaps second in popularity to B.A.S.S., though definitely first in tournament prize money, is the American Bass Fisherman, originally a Florida organization. Also in the ballpark is a predominantly Midwest group, the Bass Casters Association.

A by-product of the bass movement has been the institution of tournament fishing, often characterized by large purses and extravagant prizes. The northeast has only recently got its taste of the larger tournaments.

Putting the money where the action is has often been the mark of sportsmen, and bass anglers are no different. Through the encouragement and initial support of B.A.S.S., a privately funded Bass Reasearch Foundation was set up with the purpose of achieving "better bass fishing through research." Supported through funds from tackle manufacturers, angling groups, and other sources, the Foundation secured $200,000 in 1975.

Aside from monetary backing, bass men are also there to lend a physical hand when needed, working in conjunction with fisheries biologists in obtaining and coordinating research data. Probably one of the best examples of this type of attitude is evidenced by a B.A.S.S.-affiliated group called the Watershed Bassmasters of Westchester County, headquartered in Ossining, New York. At their own suggestion—indeed, insistence—they are undertaking a scale sample, stomach content analysis, and fish tagging program under the supervision of re ional fisheries biologists of The New York State Department of Environmental Conservation. The club has absorbed the expense of purchasing the necessary equipment and keeping the required data.

This growing interest in bass has not gone completely unnoticed by regional fisheries management personnel who are not striving to institute formal bass (and total warmwater) management programs and to conduct the research that will keep management space with angling pressure. New York State is the perfect example of this.



New bass boat has raised swivel seats, electronic gear and large and small

For the New York 1975-'76 license year, fishing license fees were raised by $2. A good portion of the money derived from that increase is to be devoted to special warmwater management programs, including a created post for a special to oversee the Department's warmwater programs and directions. This attention was something that organized sportsmen's groups in the state had been seeking in return for their support of the legislative proposal to increase license fees. Obviously the effect, of the growing interest in bass fishing are having far-reaching effects.

Outside of the state's official realm, New York is also the proving grounds for a professional, privately-funded bass research project that is far beyond the scope of all northeastern states' warmwater efforts and could have important implications for future bass management throughout the country, and particularly in the northeast.

At Fordham University's Calder Conservation and Ecology Study Center in Armonk, Gerald Iwan and his associates are conducting a doctoral research project to determine what the factors are that influence a given population of bass and how and why they affect it. The research is being conducted on a small lake where the fish population has not been exploited by anglers.

Sportsmen were the first to learn of Iwan's work, and have helped him. From a professional as well as economic standpoint, his biggest boost has come in the form of a fellowship. The American Fishing Tackle Manufacturers Association instituted their annual Boehm Fellowship in 1975. The fellowship, which carries with it a $3,000 stipend, was created for the purpose of encouraging professional careers in conservation and the first presentation was made to Iwan for his bass research project.

It is significant, of course, that the first project to receive the award should pertain to bass; even more significant is the fact that it is located in the Northeast.

But, perhaps, it isn't so significant at that, After all, any one of those anglers in Bob Baily's Tackle Shop will tell you that bass fishing is here to stay. And I got the proof.

Ambulance Boat Is Ready to Serve

STAMFORD, Conn.—Probably the first fully-equipped and staffed ambulance boat in existence, "Star of Life No. 1," was christened here earlier this month at Yacht Haven East marina for patrol and rescue duty on Long Island Sound between Norwalk and Greenwich, Conn.

Mrs. Lore Schindele of Stamford, Conn., christened the 31-foot Uniflite boat owned by Fairfield Medical Products Corp., Stamford.

The boat name refers to the new international symbol for emergency medical services, a blue, six pointed star, painted on each side of the boat and on the flying bridge to be visible from the air.

The boat is a fire retardant fiberglass cruiser similar to the high speed PBR river patrol boats of the U. S. Navy used in the Vietnam War and built by Uniflite.

Equipped with more than $12,000 worth of modern emergency medical equipment, the ambulance boat is being made available to the Stamford community by the owner for year-round emergency medical duty. Marine Police Supervisor Rod Cook will be in charge of scheduling. Volunteer doctors, registered nurses and emergency medical technicians (EMTs), including members of the Stamford Ambulance Corps, will provide medical services.

The boat will be operated by volunteers from the Stamford Marine Police, qualified police constables, and the Stamford Flotilla of the U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary. It will be based at Pier 9, Yacht Haven East, adjacent to the official Stamford Police boat.

It will be on call for emergency service by phoning the Stamford Police emergency number, 203-327-2345. Starting Memorial Day weekend and running throughout the four-month boating season on the Sound, the craft will patrol the waters from Norwalk to Greenwich on weekends and holidays when marine traffic is at a peak.

The telemetry of ECG (electrocardiograph) signals was demonstrated at the ceremony, sending readings from a volunteer "patient" on board the nearby Police boat to receiving equipment on the "Star of Life No. 1."

Ernst F. Schindele, president of Fairfield Medical, told those attending: "This could very well be a moment long remembered, the christening of the first water ambulance and emergency receiving room. The ever-increasing boat population and the rise in water sport accidents has prompted us to sponsor this research project to develop a water ambulance capable of responding to emergencies to begin effective medical treatment of victims the moment the boat arrives at the scene." and added that Fairfield Medical will underwrite operating and maintenance costs as a public service, and the medical and boat-operating crew will all be volunteers.

An active yachtsman, Schindele said he selected a Uniflite because "this make of boat was almost-universally recommended to me by the experts—marine police, Coast Guard Auxiliarists, and other boatmen—for its superb construction, seaworthiness, and unique fire retardant fiberglass. After all," he said, "we will have oxygen and other flammables on board and want to minimize any risk of fire."

Medical equipment on the "Star of Life No. 1" includes a heart defibrillator, coronary surveillance unit, oxygen system, otoscope resuscitator, aspirator, and other equipment found on the most modern land ambulances. The boat will accommodate three or more litter patients, plus ambulatory sick or wounded, along with the crew of four or five.

Persons interested in developing similar ambulance boats for their communities should contact Fairfield Medical Products Corp., 2777 Summer St., Stamford, Conn. 06905, or Uniflite, Inc., P.O. Box 1095, Bellingham, Wash. 98225.

A Builder's Guide Aids Yacht Buyers

Trojan Yacht, a division of Whittaker Corporation, has taken a sidestep into the publishing business with its new "Boat Buyer's Guide," and one of the reasons for it, says Trojan, is to create a better-informed buyer.

The 56-page booklet explains, among other things, how to decide what boat is right for you and what to expect from a dealer. There is also space devoted to examining the hull and frame of a boat.

The booklet is available for $1 from Trojan Yacht, Caller Box 1571, Lancaster, Pa. 17604.

FERRARI 1959 SWB BERLINETTA ALL ALUMINUM
Not quite. This is that extremely rare "Interim" Berlinetta Coupe which looks like an SWB Berlinetta but was fitted on the LWB "TOUR de FRANCE" chassis. Only 5 were made and only 3 are known to exist. This one has engine and chassis number 1465GT and is the car illustrated in the Dean Batchelor book and is also shown on page 96 of the Merritt-Fitzgerald Ferrari book. It is in very good condition and needs only minor cosmetic work to make it perfect. Expensive yes, but it is a rare opportunity to acquire a genuine racing Ferrari at a very competitive price.

ALFA TALK FROM MARTIN J. AIN'S ROAD & TRACK LTD AMERICA'S LARGEST ALFA DEALER

THE WIZARD OF ALFA

Come drive with me down that yellow brick road to my magic Alfa showroom, where the walls gleam of silver & gold and the floor is beautifully displayed with glistening new Alfas in every color over the rainbow. We have no need for artificial color charts here (imagine trying to pick a new car from a color chart). My staff of famous alchemists will turn a little bit of your gold into pure silver Alfas. Due to my magic prices you will need much less gold here than you will need at any other dealer. I create miracles by making Alfas affordable, you can pay one off in thirty-six full moons. I sold Ben-Hur a great handling chariot, sexy Lady Godiva a horse, and the Wicked Witch of the West an economical broom. I know I can sell you a great handling sexy economical Alfa Romeo. Don't throw money away by not checking us out. Travel a little, save a lot. Travel a lot, save even more. Wishing won't make it happen. I, the Wizard of Alfa will wave my magic pen... and make it happen. I even sold a new Alfa to Merlin.

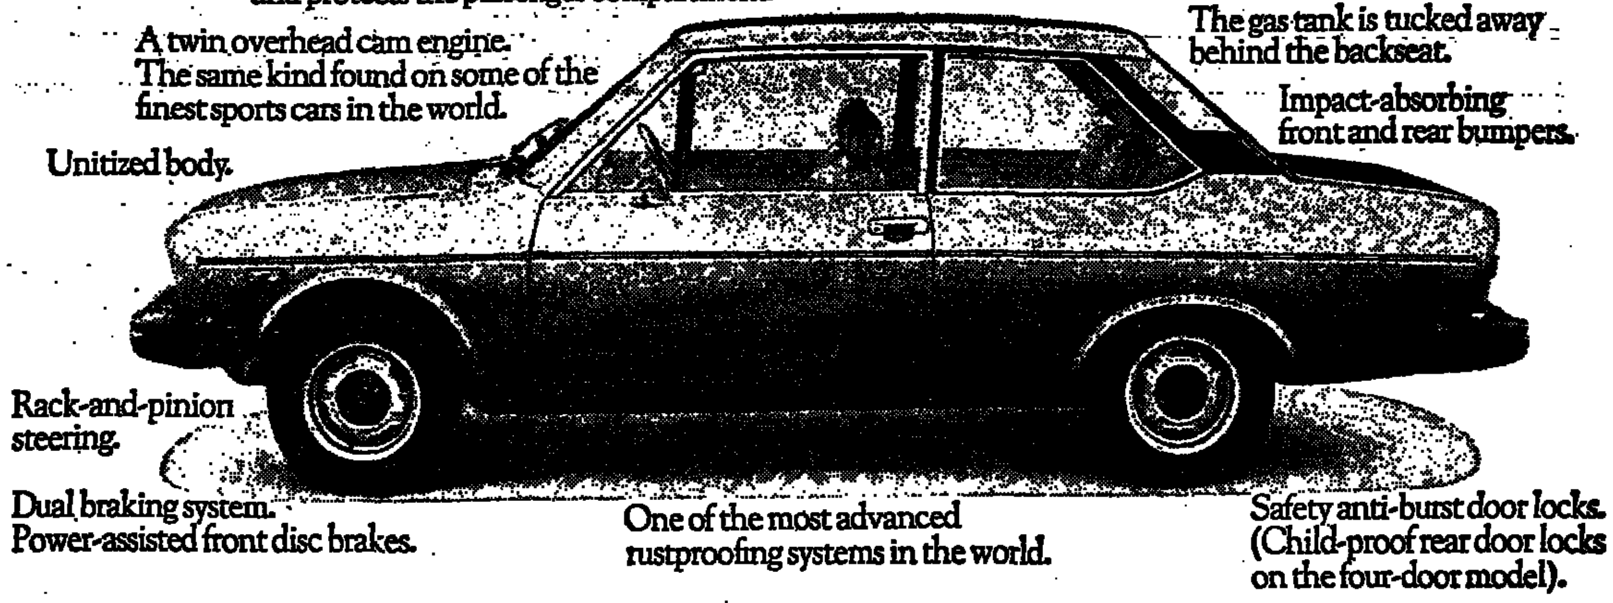
The most Fiat we've ever brought to America.



A steel cage completely surrounds and protects the passenger compartment.

A 5-speed transmission. Only one of 6 sedans in the world with this as standard equipment.

A twin overhead cam engine. The same kind found on some of the finest sports cars in the world.

The gas tank is tucked away behind the backseat.

Unitized body.

Impact-absorbing front and rear bumpers.

Rack-and-pinion steering.

Dual braking system. Power-assisted front disc brakes.

One of the most advanced rustproofing systems in the world.

Safety anti-burst door locks. (Child-proof rear door locks on the four-door model).

And here are a few other things that come as standard equipment.

|---|---|
| Carpeted trunk. | Tilting steering wheel. |
| Rear window defroster. | All-vinyl interior. |
| Radial tires. | Mag wheels. |
| Tachometer. | Quartz clock. |
| Reclining bucket seats. | Tinted glass all around. |
| Fully carpeted. | |

At Fiat, we've always held to one simple idea: the idea of a practical, sensible, intelligent car.

Well, we've taken that idea and made it somewhat bigger, and more powerful, and more luxurious. And we call it the Fiat 131.

If you've never considered a Fiat before, maybe it's time.

THE CAPRI II CAT PACK!

Four sleek, exciting new ways to run with sexy Capri II.

White. Silver. Red. Black. The gleaming prowlers of the Cat Pack. With nimble rack-and-pinion steering, wide rear track, radials, buckets, gauges, stick and overhead cam. Catch one, if you can.

See your New York, New Jersey or Connecticut Lincoln-Mercury dealer now.

We have an automobile that saves like an economy car and drives like a Mercedes-Benz. Experience it. The Mercedes-Benz 240D.

Most economy cars make you economize in areas where you don't want to cut corners. Areas like comfort. Or safety engineering. Or quality. We have an alternative. An automobile that solves your gasoline problems once and for all, but doesn't compromise other essentials in the process.

What is it? The Mercedes-Benz 240 Diesel. A car that uses economical Diesel fuel instead of gasoline. A car that burns each gallon of its fuel more completely than any gasoline engine. A car that never needs a conventional tune-up.

But outstanding running economy is just part of the story. The 240D has all of the safety design and engineering advancements that have made Mercedes-Benz automobiles a standard for the automotive world. On top of that, it has ample room for five adults and their luggage.

Sound too good to be true? See the 240D for yourself. Test drive it. Experience an automobile whose time has come.

Economy doesn't come cheap.

Many Peugeot parts are forged instead of stamped, and that's not cheap.

A Peugeot's steel-belted Michelin radials are built to far outlast normal tires, and that's not cheap.

Its patented shock absorbers are built to last at least 60,000 miles, and that's not cheap.

Every Peugeot transmission is sound-tested in a special booth by an inspector whose hearing is tested every day, and that's not cheap.

Some 46,000 points on every single Peugeot are subject to rigorous quality control. And every single Peugeot is subjected to a thorough test-drive before it leaves the factory. That's not cheap, either.

In short, Peugeot is an economical car specifically because it's not a cheap one. Because when you have a better car in the beginning, you save money in the end.

PEUGEOT
A different kind of luxury car.

Test drive the Peugeot 504, gas or diesel, sedan or wagon at these dealers.

ROLLS ROYCE

WHEN H.J. MULLINER DESIGNED SILVER CLOUD CONVERTIBLES THEY WERE AMONG THE MOST MAGNIFICENT MOTOR CARS EVER CONCEIVED OF AND CONSTRUCTED.

CARRIAGE HOUSE HAS TWO SEPARATE EXAMPLES OF THE MOST MAGNIFICENT AND RAREST OF THESE CONVERTIBLES IN EXISTENCE TODAY.

The Black Lacquered over Regal Red Silver Cloud II Convertible, design #7504, was constructed in 1960 with left-hand drive, automatic transmission, power steering and factory air-conditioning, and has been driven only 33,322 miles since new. In full keeping with tradition in the art of coach-building, this extraordinary motor car is now fitted with P-100's and custom Continental wheel conversion to set it apart and in front of any other convertible of its kind. Its perfect partner, design #7410 is a 1957 Silver Cloud I Convertible with over $40,000 spent in meticulous restoration to its present condition. Finished in 18 coats of hand-rubbed ivory, with deep brown glove-leather interior, magnolia piping and tan top, this uniquely beautiful motor car was also constructed with left hand drive, power steering, factory air-conditioning, and automatic transmission, and is now fitted as well with P-100's and Continental wheel conversion.

These motor cars, purchased as a pair, for two hundred and twenty five thousand dollars are a significant addition to any collection, and will increase significantly in value as well. Available Monday, April 26, purchase or lease directly through

BUY A VOLVO AND SEE THE WORLD.

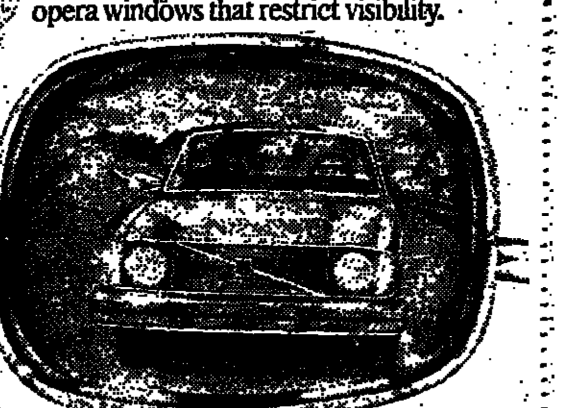
Volvo has always subscribed to the view that the better a driver sees, the better he drives.

A seemingly obvious point. But one which—just as obviously—has been overlooked by those car makers who give you massive wrap-around roof panels and tiny opera windows that restrict visibility.



Volvo, by contrast, gives you 3,830 square inches of tinted glass. And roof pillars strong enough to support seven tons, yet narrow enough to allow you over 90% of your horizontal field of view.

Most car makers these days offer rear window defoggers. But come in and look at our Volvos. They also have defoggers for the front side windows. And on our wagons, you get a washer and wiper for the rear. (Incidentally, all Volvo wipers are painted black to reduce glare.)

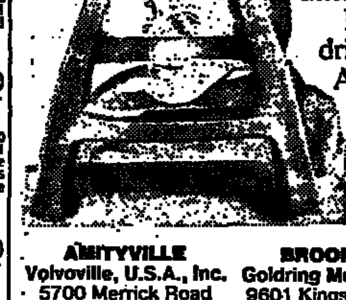
You see Volvo's concern for visibility reflected in the outside rearview mirror. It's made of a special glass that has been optically designed to reflect headlights at a different intensity than daylight. The result: an anti-glare effect for safer night driving.

Even Volvo's seats improve visibility. They have openings in the headrests so you can see behind.



At first glance, this may seem like a lot of attention to focus on how well you see out of a car.

But with 114 million drivers on the roads of America, you have a lot more to look out for than the scenery. VOLVO

The tower of New York's Trinity Church seems almost too large for the church itself, but it once had a special responsibility—as symbolic landmark for the entire city.

"This is a most remarkable structure, Sir." "Yes," said I, "everyone says so." It was in the upstairs study at Arrowhead, in Pittsfield, Mass., that "Moby Dick" was created. On Saturday the restored farmhouse will be opened to the public for the first time.

the obituaries were skimpy, and The New York Times mistakenly referred to him as Henry.

Of course, the recognition factor was to be rectified—but, alas, a generation after his death. In 1919, the centenary of Melville's birth sent scholars back to his books, and inevitably, "Moby Dick." Shrewder, more sophisticated minds discovered at last a talent that could stand shoulder to shoulder with Emerson, Hawthorne, Thoreau, Whitman, and a book that compared to any 19th-century literary classic, American or British. The intellectual side of the Melville ledger was eventually righted.

On Saturday, there is a further redressing of Melville's memory with the opening to the public of Arrowhead —the farmhouse in Pittsfield, Mass., that was home to Melville from 1850 to 1863. It was at Arrowhead, in the upstairs study facing the Greylock range, with its rolling form of a giant sperm whale, that Melville wrote "Moby Dick." It was here, to the north end of the house, that he added the piazza, where he puffed his pipe, paced up and down, and hammered out ideas for the six short stories that he would group together as "The Piazza Tales." And here in Arrowhead is the stone and brick subject of "I and My Chimney," a delightful piece of introspection that outlived the magazine in which it appeared, the October, 1855, Putnam's.

Arrowhead is hardly the same place it was when Melville's four children were romping about and the white frame house was often crowded with

There's always a Grossinger at Grossinger's

Meet MARK GROSSINGER ETESS. For over 4 generations, Grossinger's has been a family business run by a family that really cares. Paul Grossinger and his sister, Elaine are the well-known 3rd generation. Now, the 4th generation is well represented by Elaine's son, Mark and Paul's son, Jimmy.

Mark, a Columbia University alumnus and graduate student of Cornell University Hotel School is Assistant to the President (Uncle Paul). Mark is directly involved in operations, advertising and marketing.

Both Mark and Jimmy, since they were youngsters, have been instilled with the family tradition: the guest's comfort and enjoyment comes first. A friendly, tireless worker, Mark is also an enthusiastic 2-handicap golfer. And why not — having grown up challenging The G.'s 27 holes of Championship golf, including "The Big G." course — site of the 1976 New York State Men's Amateur Golf Championship, July 20-23.

Also a tennis buff, Mark is especially proud of our 4 superb Indoor Tennis Courts and 12 Outdoor Courts (4 brand new — just being completed this Spring). Grossinger's will, once again, be the site of the "Kodel Cup" National Mixed Doubles Tennis Championship, Aug. 4-6.

It's true — there's always a Grossinger at Grossinger's. Why? Because that's how Jennie wanted it, and that's the way it will always be!

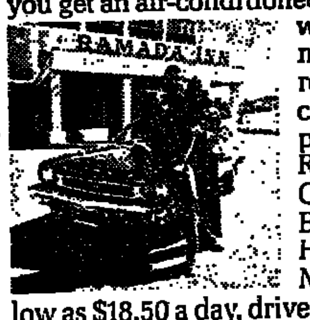
Or for as low as $18.50 a day, drive a Hertz car and stay at your choice of participating Hyatts, Sheratons, Howard Johnson's, TraveLodges and other fine independent hotels, plus many more at leading Western Resorts and National Parks.



Start your trip from any of the 7 gateway cities listed on the chart. For all the details, pick up TWA's Freewheeler West brochure from your Travel Agent.

Then there is the matter of fung sui, an important consideration in the Far East. Fung sui is the geographical orientation of a building and its component parts, which has to be determined by a geomancer. He visits the site, looks at the plans and decides if the prospect is favorable or not.

Once the principal Chinese investor in a hotel being constructed in Hong Kong came back with the word from his geomancer: bad fung sui unless the central column was removed from the lobby. "It would have caused a major reworking of the plans," said Mr. Keller. "We pleaded with him but he was adamant." Finally the geomancer was asked if anything could be done other than removing the column. The geomancer ordered that all the entrance doors to the hotel be at a 45-degree angle to the line of the building.

"You know," said Mr. Keller, "this improved the facade of the hotel immensely." He seemed lost in a reverie for a moment and then added, "Come to think of it, I don't know of any hotel I've worked on that hasn't been improved by fung sui."

"I'm planning this trip as a surprise for my wife. I'll cable her from Paris."

HERITAGE TRAIL

Directional signs with the words "American Heritage Trail" are going up in many parts of England. The trail—actually six separate trails—leads the way to 42 places that have historical associations with the United States. Most of these places will be marked with an American Heritage Trail plaque. The program is part of the English Tourist Board's observance of the Bicentennial of America's independence. The six trails and some of the points of interest along the way:

Bath Trail—Claverton Manor, home of an American museum; Buckland Abbey, Devon, purchased by Sir Francis Drake, the first Englishman to set foot in California, and Plymouth, from which the Mayflower set sail for the New World.

Canterbury Trail—Chartwell, the country home of Sir Winston Churchill, whose mother was an American; Gravesend, where Pocahontas died, and Rye, home of Henry James, the novelist.

York Trail—Selby Abbey, North Yorkshire, where the stars and stripes, which later became the symbol of America, are depicted in a 16th-century stained glass window; Flamborough Head, Humberside, off which John Paul Jones in the Bon Homme Richard fought the H.M.S. Serapis, and Washington Old Hall, Tyne and Wear, a restored manor house that was the early home of George Washington's ancestors.

Oxford Trail—Blenheim Palace, Oxfordshire, birthplace of Churchill, and Sulgrave Manor, Northamptonshire, built about 1650 by George Washington's direct ancestor, Lawrence, and containing family relics.

Chester Trail—Whitehaven, Cumbria, where John Paul Jones landed from the privateer Ranger with 30 men, set fire to three ships and spiked guns; Platt Fields, two miles south of Manchester, where a statue of Abraham Lincoln commemorates how the working people of the north of England, despite great hardship in the cotton industry caused by the Union's blockade of Confederate ports, supported Lincoln's cause when most Britons were pro-South; Merseyside, Liverpool, where the first scheduled trans-Atlantic route to New York began in the 1840's and from which thousands emigrated to America, and Coton Hall, Shropshire, a mansion associated with the ancestors of Robert E. Lee for 500 years.

Cambridge Trail—Thetford, Norfolk, the birthplace of Tom Paine; Lincoln, Lincolnshire, with a memorial in its cathedral to Capt. John Smith, who was saved from death by Pocahontas, and Boston, Lincolnshire, from which the Pilgrim Fathers tried to sail in 1607 but were imprisoned in cells still to be seen in the Guildhall. # Letters: A Rhubarb Over London Baseball

To the Editor:

With reference to Norman Gelb's article, "Riding the Ump Ain't Cricket" (Travel Section, April 11), I am most familiar with the baseball games played in London's Hyde Park, since I once lived nearby, and I can describe them in one word—NOISE.

Noise is synonymous with America. Even on board ship going to England, it was easy to distinguish an American from a European; the former was always the noise maker.

Personally, I disliked seeing baseball in Hyde Park and do not think it should be allowed. All that shouting and bellowing just to placate a bunch of noisy Americans who prefer not to live in their own country.

Hyde Park still needs peace and quiet. One cannot—by law—play transistor radios within the confines of the park, and I am gratified at this restriction, particularly when I contemplate the vacant-faced idiots one sees on the streets of America with their blaring hi-fi's blasting the quiet.

Noise is one of the reasons why it is hell on earth for me to live in this country. It is only family financial matters that keep me penned up in this limbo.

LOST LUGGAGE

To the Editor:

A couple of recent travel articles have sent me to my typewriter. One, "Lost Luggage and Bashed Bags" (Travel Section, April 4), suggested that travelers carry on luggage. I don't want to be on the 747 whose hundreds of passengers all tote huge "carry-ons." In the past six months I have been to Europe and the West Coast, and I am appalled at the large bulky bundles and suitcases the airlines are permitting people to carry on to planes that barely have enough room for passengers. Please don't encourage the practice.

In "A Break for the Older Traveler: Discounts Abroad" (Travel Section, April 11), Kay Simmon suggests that Americans attempt to benefit from British Government-subsidized reductions in fares and admissions for British elderly. Show your passports, says Miss Simmon, and "ask for the same privileges. It may work."

I find such a suggestion shocking, and one that would certainly add to the "Ugly American" image. American oldsters who can afford to travel (and I assume Miss Simmon knows travel in the 70's is not cheap) should certainly not be trying to edge in on benefits granted older nationals—many of them very poor—in other countries.

NAN M. SHILLING

Jamesburg, N.J.

To the Editor:

Concerning your luggage article, this past summer we traveled to the West Coast via American Airlines. The security scanner detected a pair of scissors in my friend's carry-on bag. He was asked to give the bag up and was told to pick it up on arrival at the airport When he went to pick it up, it could not be located. He was told to file a claim, which he did upon arrival home. It was promptly handled. He was given full reimbursement for a replacement.

Upon arriving home, we discovered that our Val-pack had been slit by a sharp object. We did not see it until we started unpacking. One week later, when we had occasion to go to the airport, we brought the Val-pack to the American Airlines terminal. We were most courteously treated; asked to file a claim and told we would be notified.

In a few days a new Val-pack, exactly like the one which had been damaged, was delivered to our door. The service could not have been more courteous, more prompt or more satisfactory.

ICELAND

To the Editor:

We also took the Iceland stopover that Linda Charlton took in "Gurgling Geysers in Iceland" (Travel Section, April 11). On our way to London in December, 1975, we stayed at the Loftleider Hotel, and en route to the hotel at 8:30 A.M. in complete darkness, we passed a cemetery with each grave outlined and lit up like a Christmas tree. Though we knew there were only three or four hours of daylight in Iceland at this time, experiencing it was quite different from just knowing about it.

We toured Reykjavik in a foot of

TRAVEL TRAVEL

THANK YOU.

That you are a giving, caring people has once again been demonstrated by your quick and overwhelming response to our emergency situation after the Guatemala earthquake in February.

We couldn't possibly be making such a quick recovery without your help.

But we are recovering, and things are returning to normal in Guatemala. Our priceless historical areas of Antiqua and Tikal were virtually untouched by the quake. Chichicastenango suffered only minor damage and the market continues to operate. Lake Atitlan was also spared, and the hotels and restaurants in Guatemala City are all open.

Since you so thoughtfully came to our aid when we needed you, we wanted you to know that we are fine.

And we're waiting for you to visit so we can thank each of you in person for your help.

Literally "island of nuts," because of the walnut trees that once covered it, Ile aux Noix has had a fort on it since 1666, guarding French Canada first against the Iroquois (the river was originally called "la rivière des Iroquoix") and later against the English who destroyed the last French fort and never rebuilt it. Schuyler occupied the undefended island and used it as a base to attack Fort St. Jean, 15 miles downstream.

Fort Lennox, built in 1782 and enlarged during the War of 1812, is built of stone and surrounded by earthern ramparts and a 60-foot-wide moat that is filled with water during the summer. Its museum exhibits 17th-century Indian relics and old British and French military equipment. There are rest rooms and picnic tables but no refreshments. Visitors munch mainland sandwiches while contemplating the fate of American soldiers who camped here through the winter and spring of '76, suffering from an epidemic of smallpox that carried them off at the rate of 15-20 a day. The sick were cared for and buried on Hospital Island farther downstream. On June 29, 1776, the last Americans left Ile aux Noix and it became a base for the British fleet that controlled Lake Champlain for the rest of the war. The fort is open daily, 9 A.M. to 6 P.M., from May 1 to Sept. 15 and on weekends during the rest of the year, river conditions permitting. Admission is free. The water taxi operates only when the fort is open.

A 15-mile drive north along Route 223 follows the Schuyler invasion route to St. Jean where the Collège Militaire de St. Jean, Canada's Air Force Academy, occupies the site of Fort St. Jean, once one of Montreal's key defenses. For 59 days, 200 British regulars supported by a few cannon and a small band of Indians held off the American army. The invasion timetable was set back and Governor Carleton had time to organize his defense, forcing the Americans to fight a winter campaign for which they were badly prepared. During the siege, Schuyler fell ill and had to hand over his command to Montgomery; Carleton, headquartered in Montreal, tried unsuccessfully to relieve the fort. After a while the American besiegers ran short of supplies and had to capture Fort Chambly farther north with its food and ammunition in order to carry on. (The British commander, Maj. Charles Preston, was persuaded to surrender by a Montreal hairdresser sent into the fort with the hair-raising news that relief was not on the way.)

Ten miles north of St. Jean, signs in the town of Chambly lead to Fort Chambly National Historic Park. Town and fort were named for Jacques Chambly, a 17th-century French Army captain who built the first fortification on the site and founded Chambly, the first European settlement on the Richelieu. In the fall of '75, Fort Chambly, a massive stone structure resembling a medieval castle, was garrisoned by Major Stepford and 88 regulars. The Americans bypassed Chambly, placed two guns north of the fort and sent a couple of well aimed shots against its walls. The fort lacked the outer earthern walls needed to absorb heavy artillery fire and on Oct. 18 Stepford surrendered. Among the prisoners the Americans took were 30 women and 51 children, families of the garrison.

Fort Chambly was used to imprison Canadians who refused to collaborate with the invaders. In 1776, it was set afire by the retreating Americans but Burgoyne's troops rebuilt it. Today it is a square, stone shell overlooking the river with the remains of a towering pentagonal bastion at each corner. A museum exhibits artifacts of the fort and a scale model. A theater seating 40 persons shows a 15-minute slide presentation of the history of the fort and town that deserves an Academy award for charm and originality. Along two sides of the interior are the remains of workshops, storerooms and living quarters, labeled and open to visitors. The bastions, including one that contains a dungeon, may also be entered. On the river side are the remains of two buttresses and an elevated platform overlooking a stretch of rapids. Rest rooms are available.

The park's two and a half acres encompass shady walks along the river, picnic tables, a parking lot and an old cemetery where sleep early French settlers and British and American soldiers. The only monument still standing was erected by the Saranac, N.Y., D.A.R. to the memory of Gen. John Thomas. On May 1, 1776, Thomas assumed command of the American forces outside Quebec and led them back to the Richelieu where he contracted smallpox and died in Chambly on June 2, 1776. The fort has rest rooms but no refreshments, and is open all year daily from 9 to 6. There is no charge for admission.

The Richelieu forts captured, Montgomery led his men to Montreal. Sir Guy Carleton withdrew his garrison of 150 to ships waiting on the St. Lawrence River, but the vessels fell into American hands. Carleton escaped with a few aides and fled to Quebec. There is nothing left of the walls and fortified positions that once protected Montreal and only a few buildings dating from the Colonial period. One of them, the Chateau de Ramizay, located in the oldest part of the city at 290 Notre Dame Street opposite the City Hall, was American occupation headquarters for seven months.

The American occupation of Montreal was nothing to be proud of. At 400 St. Paul Street stands the Chapel of Notre Dame de Bonsecours (built in 1772), which, like all the city's Catholic churches, was ordered closed by occupation commander Gen. David Wooster on Christmas Eve, '75. In an ordinance posted on the church doors, he threatened to exile anyone who spoke against the Continental Congress and carried out the threat against several hundred Montrealers. When American credit went sour, American soldiers, paid in Continental dollars not worth a Continental, took or stole what they could not buy. Smallpox broke out. The men left for home as their enlistments ran out.

In April, 1776, a Congressional mission arrived at the chateau consisting of Benjamin Franklin, Samuel Chase and—a canny choice—Charles Carroll, a Catholic delegate from Maryland. He was accompanied by his cousin, Father John Carroll, who later became the first Archbishop of Baltimore. Sent to salvage the invasion and rescue American-Canadian relations, the mission pardoned Wooster's exiles, freed the Canadians held at Chambly, but failed nevertheless. The commissioners returned home in June to tell Congress how badly the invasion had been managed.

Today, the Chateau de Ramizay is a museum open to the public Tuesday through Saturdays from 10 to 5 and from 2 to 5 on Sundays. It is closed on Mondays. Its exhibit cases are filled with the relics and memorabilia of 300 years of Canadian history. There is also a portrait of Franklin that once hung in the Uffizi and a pass signed by the three commissioners permitting certain American soldiers to return to their homes. The chateau's ballroom is being reconstructed with antique paneling and will be furnished with antique period furniture to recapture the appearance and atmosphere of the chateau during its French colonial period. Admission is $1 for adults, 50 cents for students and 25 cents for children aged 6 to 14. Parking is available a block away in a large municipal lot behind the City Hall.

By the time Montreal fell to Montgomery, Arnold and 700 survivors of his epic march were laying siege to Quebec. Arnold's Canadian line of march begins at the United States-Canadian border hamlet of Coburn Gore, Me., at the northern end of the State Route 27. Beyond Coburn Gore, Quebec Route 161 passes through farmlands that in 1775 were natural meadows. Archeologists have found artifacts where Arnold's troops camped on the meadows. The road crosses the Arnold River followed by the expedition into a maze of bogs and swamps in which it floundered for days, hopelessly lost, before reaching Lake Mégantic. The men ate pet dogs and boiled ammunition pouches and suffered fevers and illness. The bogs and swamps are still there, untouched by civilization but out of sight of Route 161 which borders the lake and enters the town of Lake Mégantic. A short distance beyond the 161/204 intersection, behind the City Hall where the expedition camped, is the first of three sets of panels commemorating the march. Each set of panels describes the march route in text and maps.

The march route continues north out of Lake Mégantic on Route 204 alongside the Chaudière River, described in Arnold's diary as a dangerous stream but the easiest route to the St. Lawrence River and Quebec. Approximately 44 miles north of Lake Mégantic, 204 crosses a concrete highway bridge marked by a sign for the Spofford River. On the other side of the bridge, a footpath leads down to a bluff overlooking the Great Falls of the Chaudière where the army lost its last boats and whatever was left of its supplies. Exhausted, out of food and the will to go on, the men camped beside the falls while Arnold and Capt. Henry Dearborne canoed ahead to look for food.

Three miles north in Sartigan, now St. Joseph de Beauce, Arnold bought cattle and flour from charitable farmers for his starving troops and continued on to the St. Lawrence. Route 173 traces his route north, then from Scott northeast to Point Levis on the St. Lawrence opposite Quebec where Arnold reassembled his army on Nov. 9, 1775. A ferry now carries passengers and cars across the river in a few minutes. Arnold's men waited four days for a gale to subside, then dodged British patrol boats on the nights of Nov. 13 and 14 and landed in Wolfe's Cove. Arnold led them up the cliffs following the path used by Gen. James Wolfe's army in 1759 and out onto the Plains of Abraham for an equally audacious attempt to capture the city. Wolfe succeeded but lost his life. Arnold failed and got off with a game leg.

The Plains of Abraham, now the Parc des Champs de Bataille, can be reached from the Grand Allée, the east-west boulevard that leads to the reconstructed gates and walls that set off Old Quebec from the contemporary city. Monuments and markers in the park memorialize the battle of 1759, but not the siege of 1775-76. Arnold demanded the city's surrender. Its 5,000 inhabitants were defended by a mixed bag of 1,200 French-Canadian and English militia, some sailors and a few

After canoeing with Thoreau, drop in on Longfellow.

Less than 20 minutes drive from the boating and fishing at Concord's Walden Pond, beloved by Thoreau, stands the famous Wayside Inn in Sudbury, which was in turn immortalized by Longfellow. It was old long before Longfellow (both Lafayette and Washington dined here). Kids love to watch the great water wheel turning at the old stone gristmill on the grounds.

And from there, it's only 25 minutes to bustling Boston, with its restaurants, theaters, and other entertainments.

Connecticut Bicentennial Quiz

1. Where can you find a Revolutionary War British cannonball protruding from an old tavern doorpost? At Keeler Tavern in Ridgefield. The British fired their heavy artillery during the Battle of Ridgefield. One cannonball aimed at the American militia buried itself in a cornerpost of the old stagecoach inn. Built in 1733, Keeler Tavern has been meticulously restored. Guides dressed in colonial costume make the old inn an exciting stop on your Connecticut Bicentennial tour.

2. Do you know where General Washington met Rochambeau to plan the American army's victorious drive to Yorktown? At Webb House in Wethersfield. Here's an outstanding example of 18th century colonial architecture. The Webb House was the site of one of the most important Revolutionary War meetings. It appears today just as in 1781. In fact, the same wallpaper Mrs. Webb hung for General Washington's visit has been carefully preserved on the walls of this important National Historic Landmark. Fine furniture, fabrics, and silver add to the charm of what is a "must stop" on your Connecticut Bicentennial tour.

3. How can I get complete information on these and other exciting places in Connecticut? Just mail this coupon today.

Folk Festival

Herbert A. Feuerlicht

Ukrainian dancers are cheered, but food commands the most attention at the Pittsburgh Folk Festival. This year 24 ethnic groups will take part from June 17 to 20.

[...]ooth has signs listing its menu [...]native language and English. [...]w is gyuvech to the Bulgarians, [...]o the Hungarians, golaz to the Slovenes and struisin mairtsola to the Irish. Prices range from about 5 cents for cookies to $1.75 for a plate of stuffed cabbage, potato dumplings, sausage and bread. Most of the breads (rye, soda, walnut, pumpkin) are homemade, as is almost everything else, including pastries, noodles, hot and cold soups, preserves, cheese and yogurt. The Filipinos offer a homemade drink of water, sugar and shredded cantaloupe.

Only the English and Scots do not translate their menus. I asked a woman at the English booth what a "tipsy parson" was, hoping not to offend the Church of England. "Dessert," she replied, pointing to a piece of cake that looked as if it was hemorrhaging. I asked the ingredients. "Stale cake, sherry, jam and Jell-O," she said. I was reminded of the standard festival joke that someday there will be a WASP booth serving nothing but sliced white bread with mayonnaise.

Visitors are confronted with endless choices. "Shall we look around first or shall we just eat?" is a common question. The timid go directly to their nationality booth; the more adventurous go hunting, usually in their neighbors' plates. Everyone observes what everyone else eats as they sit elbow to elbow at long tables or stroll through the halls or along the outside terrace. Strangers stop each other to ask, "What's that? Do you recommend it? What booth should we go to?"

Inevitably there is a certain amount of ethnic confusion:

"The apple strudel is pretty good."
"Where did you get it?"
"I think it was the Irish booth."

Though the people, like the booths, are predominantly Slavic or Central European, with a touch of Mediterranean, word of mouth creates a huge demand for the Philippine chicken, which is marinated for a week in vinegar, water and spices and, while still wet, floured and fried at the booth. It is so good that people working at other booths rush over to swap their own food for it.

There are other activities at the festival besides eating, though that is the most popular one. Spontaneous folk dancing springs up at both ends of the long main hall and several places in between. A number of itinerant musicians play constantly. Each evening there are cooking demonstrations. A disaster almost ensues when the Chinese set up their wok on the wrong table next to a sign that says "Croatian apple strudel." The confusion is compounded when the Chinese cook hands out the recipes stacked under the table and bemused spectators start reading about strudel as the Chinese begin to make egg rolls.

Most of the display booths exhibit traditional costumes or crafts; some have live demonstrations. At the Serb booth an old woman cuts homemade noodles. "Where's the machine?" I ask. "I'm the machine," she says, slicing away.

At the Chinese booth Dr. Sylvia Pan Chang is scheduled to demonstrate Chinese calligraphy, using a brush and grinding her own ink. I ask to see her. "Dr. Chang will not be able to demonstrate calligraphy tonight," I am told. "She burned her fingers making egg rolls."

At the Latvian booth a young woman plays a zither-like instrument called a kokle, while an old woman weaves belts on a hand loom and a girl lays out traditional geometric designs with beans, which is how children were once taught the designs by their mothers.

A Slovene woman works a spinning wheel, and a German woman does tatting. At the Bulgarian booth Mrs. Jordanka Jordanova shows how to spin raw wool on a distaff. "The magic is in the fingers," she says, as she twists the wool into thread. Half a century ago, when she was 19, Mrs. Jordanova came to America from her village in the Valley of the Roses. Her husband was a baker; her son is an assistant professor at Duquesne University and program director of the festival. Thousands of American folk dancers do the Bulgarian dances that she taught to their dance leaders. When she finishes spinning she demonstrates how to cook Bulgarian musaka. She is concerned by the fact that she is the only member of the Bulgarian community in Pittsburgh who knows how to use the distaff. "Some day my time will come," she says, "and who will do it when I am gone?"

At 8 o'clock the food and display booths close, and everyone moves into the main arena to munch Gelusils and watch the various groups perform. Even in the air-conditioned arena there is a pervasive smell of stuffed cabbage. In order to accommodate the large audience last year, a high stage was erected in the center of the arena. This worked a hardship for the performers, who were no longer able to re-create a village atmosphere by using backdrops or live animals. In past festivals some groups used donkeys, mules, goats, cows, a St. Bernard and a draft horse; the Israelis once tried fruitlessly to rent a camel. The livestock added more than ethnic color; it became necessary during the acts for someone to stand by with a broom and shovel.

One year, when the Bulgarians were re-enacting a village wedding, the leading male dancer carried a rooster, folk symbol of virility and fertility. Another dancer fired a shotgun into the air, which is mandatory at Balkan weddings. The bullet was a blank, but the frightened rooster squawked so loudly that the Bulgarians got a letter of complaint from the humane society, which thought the bird had been shot. The rooster, alive and well, was sold after the performance for $2.

Touches like a live rooster or donkey enchant the audience, which values ambience as well as athleticism. The older spectators know what village dancing is like—that children and old people take part, that everyone sings, and footwork is done subtly—inside your shoes, as the Serbs say, not in midair. Ukrainian and Greek squats and leaps are cheered, but so are the simple, lively dances of Lithuanians and Scandinavians, which permit everyone in the arena to clap, stamp and hum in time to the music.

Some performances reflect the poignant longing for the past that many older people still harbor. The Slovaks enact the visit of an American couple to their native village in "Slovakia"; they never refer to Czechoslovakia any more than the Serbs, Croats or Slovenes refer to Yugoslavia. The crowd chuckles at the Slovak vision of American hayseeds—the man in a straw boater, the hefty woman in a huge, floppy hat. "I didn't know Bella Abzug was Slovak," says a voice in the audience.

Teen-aged Ukrainian girls move across the stage like icons while their mothers sing a folk song about a mother's love for her children. Tinikling, the Philippine dance that is done by stepping between clashing bamboo poles, is skillfully performed by several couples, the youngest aged 10. Bulgarian children act out a dance showing the planting of peppers. Both Hungarians and Scandinavians have 3-year-olds dancing; the oldest performer seems to be a 75-year-old Scot.

Performances end shortly after 10 P.M. and the booths then reopen. The hardy have until midnight for more eating, folk dancing or just looking around. By the final evening of the festival the people cooking and serving in the booths look stupefied and the festival-goers look stuffed. The potato pancakes, the strudel, the lamb and the egg rolls are sold out, along with the yogurt, the cheese, the baklava and almost everything else.

After the last performance comes the grand finale. The roof of the Pittsburgh Civic Arena is built so that it can be opened if weather permits. Everyone "aaaaaaaahs" as the dome divides. Above, stars shine brightly. Onstage, hundreds of people representing the ethnic groups participating in the festival are in costume, clapping, clogging, dancing, waving and singing, "This land is your land, this land is my land. . ." At that moment, you can believe them.

...ifelong Passion ...Sleeping Giants

The author's continuing obsession with volcanoes is reflected in his photographs: Mount Fuji dominating Japan's Lake Hakone, lightning striking San Pedro across Lake Atitlan in Guatemala and, left, the forum of Pompeii, with Mount Vesuvius in the background.

invisible citizens. Here and there we saw the plaster figures of those who had been overwhelmed by the rain of hot ashes. The excavators had poured plaster into the cavities in the solidified ash, preserving their dying contortions. My children were appalled by the cast of a large dog curled up in death. Our Neopolitan guide kept trying to steer my wife and me into the empty villas to view the pornographic wall frescos while keeping the children outside on some pretext.

For me, the visit was an expected but no less frustrating anticlimax. No lava, no flames, no smoke, not even an obliging cloud near the peak so that I might capture at least the semblance of a live volcano on him.

A few years later I flew over Stromboli on Sicily. Completely dormant. On another trip, to Mexico, there had been a few eruptions before my arrival, but when I showed up, all was peace and quiet. Mount Fuego in Guatemala had the faintest hint of a puff of smoke over it when I arrived, rather like window No. 2 of long ago, when the wisp of cotton stood atop the cut-out image of Vesuvius. If I watched intently, Fuego would obligingly blow one tiny puff after anothe. Still . . .

A few evenings later, I was photographing another Guatemalan volcano, San Pedro, reflected in Lake Atitlan in the highlands. With the suddenness of the tropics, the light of the sky was extinguished by a storm which embraced the cone. Lightning began to play across the sky and strike at the volcano. Every second or two, another bolt would flash behind the cone or lash into the peak. It seemed a monstrous challenge, the fire of the sky taunting the volcano to bring forth its own fire. The cosmic display lasted a few minutes and was followed by torrential rain, but the volcano held firm—it did not reply.

Japan is celebrated for Mount Fuji, a volcano of classic proportions. Lofty and cloud-swept, it is often shrouded in mist. Dawn is the most propitious time to view this elusive mountain, and that's when I lined up at Lake Hakone. The red-orange Tori gate across the lake had been positioned by the Shinto priests with great care to balance the view of Fuji. As the mists parted, the volcano towered above us, perfect in proportion, muted in color—and, of course, dormant.

The Hawaiian Islands are in the center of the most active volcanic area on the face of the earth. Surely here I could see at least a little fire, and just a bit of flowing lava. In 1972 my wife and I flew to Honolulu on the island of Oahu. On the day we arrived, Kilauea Crater on the big island of Hawaii put on a little eruption with a good token display of fire and spouted out a respectable flow of lava. I was overjoyed with anticipation. Alas, by the time we arrived seven days later it was all over. True, we still could see nice puffs of smoke from vents in the floor of Kilauea Crater.

Last year the American Association of Museums held its annual meeting in Los Angeles, and as a post-convention trip, 50 of us visited Hawaii. Our itinerary was the reverse of the 1972 trip, and we landed at Hilo, on the big island of Hawaii. The next day by chartered bus, we went to Kilauea Crater which is perched on the southern flank of Mauna Loa, the largest volcano in the islands. It rises to a height of 13,680 feet above sea level and it continues another 17,000 feet down into the ocean. With a total height of 30,000 feet, it is the largest mountain on our planet. Mauna Loa had last erupted in 1950, and for the past 25 years had been completely dormant.

Leading my museum colleagues up to the brink of Kilauea Crater, I was appalled to find it utterly lifeless. Only a little smoke here and there proved that we were not looking into an abandoned quarry. I searched for some old lava that might still be warm, even faintly warm, but I was met by cold black rock. Posing as an expert on volcanism, I pontificated that the Hawaiian volcanoes were deep in a dormant phase with no significant activity since my last visit of three years ago, and no likelihood of increased activity in the foreseeable future.

A week later, our group was in Honolulu; it was the Fourth of July and an Army colonel in our company managed to arrange for a party for us in the Officers Club perched high on Diamond Head. It seemed apt, Diamond Head being the cone of an ancient extinct volcano. As we dined, someone reported a radio broadcast of a slight earthquake that day on the big island of Hawaii. We had even missed that.

My wife and I caught the last plane home on the night of July 5. As it climbed into the midnight sky over Honolulu, I pushed the seat back, kicked off my shoes and tried to settle down for the long flight to the mainland. Then the pilot came on the intercom:

"Folks, you are not going to believe this, but the volcano Mauna Loa has started to erupt. If you look out the right side windows, you will see it."

I dove for the right side windows. There on the horizon was a spectacular pillar of fire shooting out of the top of the black cone of Mauna Loa. Billowing clouds of smoke swirled upward for thousands of feet, illuminated by the flaming fountains of glowing lava. Never have I seen and never do I wish to see again such a display of overwhelming and uncontrollable forces. I had been seeking it for years, but now it was too much.

Once again, I was viewing an awesome sight through a small window. I clutched the window frame with the same intensity as I had years ago when the tiny models of Vesuvius held me enthralled. On either side of the silhouette of Mauna Loa, where the land meets the sea, were the lights of the cities of Hilo and Kona. Above them towered the column of fire. Would the lava flow down and eradicate them this night? Was I again seeing "The Last Days of Pompeii" right before my eyes?

The pilot was not permitted to circle the holocaust and he headed for the distant mainland at 500 miles an hour. I pressed my face to the glass and watched the flames recede behind us for a half hour. Finally there was only a speck of red in a black void.

The next morning the radio reported that the eruption had died down without damage, and Mauna Loa had resumed her interrupted sleep.

What's Doing Around FORT MYERS, FLORIDA

By ANGEL and LEREA CASTILLO

OVERVIEW — This city of more than 40,000 residents, about 125 miles south of Tampa and 150 miles northwest of Miami, is the metropolis of Florida's booming southwest corner. Tourists who have stayed behind and retirees searching for the Florida sunshine away from the state's big cities have turned this into the fastest-growing area in the United States. Lee County (named after Robert E. Lee), of which Fort Myers is the principal city, has soared in population from the 105,000 recorded in the 1970 census to an estimated 175,000 today. As you drive along Fort Myers's stately McGregor Boulevard, with its rows of majestic royal palms, you will see piles of sewage pipes stacked at construction sites, billboards advertising luxury condominium projects and flag-bedecked model homes. Beaches, parks, fresh- and salt-water fishing, an average annual temperature of almost 74 degrees and the third lowest ragweed pollen count (0.19) in the country are among the attractions.

SANIBEL AND CAPTIVA—Until 1963, when a four-mile causeway opened to motor traffic, these two islands in the Gulf of Mexico, 18 miles west of Fort Myers along State Route 867, could be reached by boat only. Today the causeway across San Carlos Bay (round-trip toll: $3) provides easy access for thousands of visitors looking for some of Florida's finest beaches, 20 miles of white sand with blue Gulf waters on one side and dense Australian pines on the other. With the boom have come condominium apartments and pitched battles between environmentalists and developers. The residents of Sanibel incorporated the island as a city in November, 1974, to try to cope with the explosive growth; Captiva (so named because the pirate José Gaspar is reported to have housed women prisoners on it) is linked to Sanibel to the north by a small bridge at Blind Pass and is administered by Lee County. Both islands are famous for their sea shells, and collectors can be seen strolling the sand early in the morning (some before dawn, with flashlights to guide them) looking for choice specimens. Favorite shelling spots include the beach by the Sanibel Lighthouse, at the eastern tip of the island; Bowman's Beach, off Sea Bell Road at the northwest end of Sanibel, and the southern tip of Captiva Island just across from Blind Pass. For information about shelling, a chart of the tides to help plan forays and a list of motels, restaurants, shops, etc., stop at the office of the Sanibel-Captiva Chamber of Commerce, located across from the causeway at the main approach to Sanibel. For advance planning, write the Sanibel-Captiva Chamber of Commerce, Causeway Road, Sanibel Island, Fla. 33957, or call 813-472-1080. Other information about the islands and their natural attractions may be obtained by writing the Sanibel-Captiva Conservation Foundation, P. O. Box 25, Sanibel Island, Fla. 33952.

OTHER BEACHES—In contrast to the unspoiled look of the beaches at Sanibel and Captiva is Fort Myers Beach, a more upbeat area favored by younger (14-25) crowds. It stretches for seven miles along Estero Island, also in the Gulf. To get there from downtown Fort Myers, turn left off McGregor Boulevard to San Carlos Boulevard (State Route 865) and go straight ahead until you see the water. The main beach area is a public park at the intersection of San Carlos and Estero Boulevards. This is a honky-tonk, Coney Island kind of place where sunbathers eat hot dogs and drink beer from plastic cups at a restaurant called Times Square or at nearby spots with names like Gino's Pizzeria, the Porthole and the Shrimp Box. More quiet is Carl E. Johnson Beach Park by Big Carlos Pass at the southern tip of Estero Island. Quieter still is Cayo Costa Park, at the northern tip of Lacosta Island, north of Captiva Island in the Gulf and accessible by boat only. This 640-acre park includes beaches and nature trails and is a game preserve and bird refuge. If you don't have a boat, one of the many nearby places to rent one is the Twin Palms Marina (tel.: 813-283-0696) in the tiny fishing community of Bokeelia at the northern tip of Pine Island. A small boat with an outboard motor rents for about $25 a day, and it's easy to get to Cayo Costa by crossing the Pine Island Sound. If you bring your own boat, the ramp fee at the marina is $1.

FISHING — Both fresh- and salt-water fishing is available in Fort Myers—in the Gulf and in the 150-mile Okeechobee Waterway. The waterway system begins in Stuart, on Florida's East Coast, and flows through portions of the Indian and St. Lucie Rivers and gigantic Lake Okeechobee before linking with the Caloosahatchee River and proceeding through Fort Myers to the Gulf. No license is required for salt-water fishing; fresh-water licenses for out-of-state visitors cost $2.25 for five days and $3.25 for 14 days. There's good fishing from a number of piers at Fort Myers Beach and on Sanibel, Captiva and Pine islands; most of the piers are free, others charge 50 cents a person. Fishing is also allowed from most bridges, one of the most popular being the one linking Lee County to Pine Island across Matlacha Pass, on State Road 78. Party boats leave from a number of places in the Fort Myers area for half-day and full-day fishing trips that cost about $3 to $10 a person. A number of these boats dock at the marinas at the Hurricane Bay and Estero Pass bridges on State Route 865, just before Fort Myers Beach. Fishing expeditions on a charter boat can be arranged. Among places where charter boats are available are the Tarpon Bay Marina (tel.: 813-472-1323) on Sanibel Island and the "Tween Waters Marina (tel.: 813-481-4895) on Captiva Island. A pamphlet about Florida fishing can be obtained by writing the Florida Department of Natural Resources, Larson Building, Tallahassee, Fla. 32304. For more information about the Okeechobee system, write the Okeechobee Waterway Association, P.O. Box 1255, Fort Myers, Fla. 33902.

NATURE — The 3,500-acre J. N. "Ding" Darling National Wildlife Refuge covers about one-third of Sanibel Island and is maintained by the Department of the Interior as a natural habitat for migratory birds and wild animals. There is a five-mile unpaved road running through the mangrove islands that make up the refuge, and you can drive along it on a self-guided tour; some visitors like to tour the refuge by bicycle or in canoes that can be rented for $7 a half-day, the better to observe or photograph the alligators, pelicans and egrets along the way. The refuge is open daily from dawn to dusk and there is no admission fee; fishing is allowed but camping isn't. The refuge office is by the lighthouse at the eastern tip of Sanibel Island (tel.: 813-472-1100). A more domesticated nature area is Koreshan State Park (the name comes from Koreshan Unity, a religious group that pioneered the area in 1893). This 305-acre park, about 18 miles south of Fort Myers on U.S. 41, has picnic tables, parts of the Estero River (due to alligators, swimming is not allowed), nature trails, salt-water fishing and tours of the pioneers' original botanical gardens Wednesday through Sundays at 10 A.M. and 2 P.M.; 50 cents for persons over 12. The park is open all year from 8 A.M. until sundown, and there are 60 wooded sites for campers. Admission to the park is 25 cents, and the camping fee is $4.68 a day, including electricity. Campsites may not be reserved in advance. For information, write the park office at P. O. Box 7, Estero, Fla. 33928, or call 813-992-0311. About 40 miles southeast of Fort Myers (but worth the ride) on State Route 846 is the 11,000-acre Corkscrew Swamp Sanctuary, maintained by the National Audubon Society. There is a mile-long boardwalk a few feet above the water and it winds through the bald cypress forest; an illustrated booklet describes the plants and animals along the way. Camping is not permitted. The sanctuary is open from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. every day, and admission is $3 for adults and $1 for high school and college students; children under 12 are free. For information, write the sanctuary at P. O. Box 1875, Route 6, Sanctuary Road, Naples, Fla. 33940.

BOAT TRIPS — One of the most unusual experiences to be had in Florida is a five-day trip through the backwaters of the Okeechobee Waterway aboard the shanty boat "Lazy Bones," a converted barge whose jeep engine pushes it at 3½ knots past frogs, turtles and marsh birds. There is no television or bar on board, but you can bring your own liquor. The emphasis is on relaxing, bird-watching, fishing and enjoying three home-cooked meals a day. About 16 persons and a crew of three, including the owner, Capt. Stan Maurer, go on each trip and sleep on board in cabins designed for two persons each. The boat leaves Mondays at 9:30 A.M. and returns Fridays about noon, and you can leave your car at the docking area, near the intersection of Orange River Boulevard and Williamson Road, about seven miles east of Fort Myers. The trip costs $198 a person, and a $70 deposit is required to confirm a reservation. The present schedule calls for the last cruise of the season to be made tomorrow but they will resume Thanksgiving. For details, write: Shanty Boat Cruises, Inc., Route 14, Box 434, Fort Myers, Fla. 33905, or call 813-694-3401. Three-hour "Jungle Cruises" through local waterways are provided by two large sightseeing boats that depart from the downtown Fort Myers Yacht Basin at Lee Street and Edwards Drive Tuesday through Sunday. The boats leave at 10 and 10:30 A.M. and at 2 and 2:30 P.M., except on Sunday, when they sail only at 1 and 2 P.M. Tickets are $4 ($2 for children under 12). The number for reservations is 813-334-7474.

PERFORMING ARTS — The Fort Myers Symphony performs at the city's Exhibition Hall on Hendry Street, downtown, usually at 8 P.M. Tickets are generally $4 for adults and $2.50 for students. For details, write the Exhibition Hall at P.O. Box CC, Fort Myers, Fla. 33902 or call 813-334-8606. There are two good dinner theaters in the area: the Barn Dinner Theater on Iona Road, in Fort Myers, and the Naples Dinner Theater, about 35 miles south of Fort Myers on State Route 846.

EDISON ESTATE—In 1885 Thomas Alva Edison went to Fort Myers to help improve his health and he made it his winter headquarters until his death in 1931. Edison built his home, Seminole Lodge, on a 14-acre waterfront estate, and when his widow, Mina, died in 1947, she left the estate to the city, which has preserved it in its original state. Conducted tours take in the house and Edison's laboratory and experimental botanical gardens. The estate is at 2350 McGregor Boulevard (State Route 867), a few minutes from downtown Fort Myers. The tours, which last about one hour and 15 minutes, cost $2 for adults and $1 for students (pre-schoolers are free). The hours are 9 A.M. to 4 P.M., Monday through Saturday, and 12:30 to 4:30 P.M. on Sunday. The telephone number is 813-334-1280.

DINING OUT—Although a bit out of the way, the Matlacha Oyster House, an un-fancy restaurant in a former community center building, is probably the one seafood place you won't want to miss in this area. Owner Joe Fillingim says his secret is buying most of what he serves fresh from local fishing boats, and frying anything that needs to be fried in peanut oil only. He also squeezes Key limes in the summer and freezes the juice to have a supply year-round for making Key lime pies, a very popular dessert (the pies, Mr. Fillingim says, should be yellow to be natural; green Key lime pies denote artificial coloring). Prices range from $7.50 for a mixed seafood platter to $9.95 for Lobster Thermidor. The hours are 4:30 to 9 P.M. Tuesday through Thursday, 4:30 to 10 P.M. on Friday and Saturday and noon to 8 P.M. on Sunday; dress is informal and reservations are not accepted. The restaurant is on Pine Island Road (State Route 78), about 13 miles west of the northern entrance to Fort Myers on U.S. 41. The telephone number is 813-283-0520. For more formal dining, the King's Crown Restaurant at the South Seas Plantation, a resort at the north end of Captiva Island, is a good spot. Dinner is served from 6 to 10 P.M., seven days a week, and reservations can be made by calling 813-472-1551. Specialties include Beef Wellington ($11.50), Veal Oscar ($10.50) and Roast Duck à l'Orange ($8.50), and you can top it off with Cherries Jubilee or Peaches Flambé ($6 for two persons). The Nutmeg House at 2761 Gulf Drive, is one of several fine restaurants on Sanibel Island. Specialties include seafood items such as grouper, snapper and stone crabs, also steaks and leg of lamb, and prices range from about $6.95 to $8.95. The hours are 5:45 to 9 P.M., Tuesday through Sunday, and reservations can be made by calling 813-472-1561. Credit cards are not accepted. Pate's Steak Pub, at Second and Broadway in Fort Myers, features charcoal-broiled aged Western beef, served by candlelight. Dinner is served daily from 5 P.M. to midnight, and reservations are not required. Prices range from about $3.45 to $16.95 (for a steak for two); the telephone number is 813-332-2065. One of several excellent Chinese restaurants in the area is the Dragon Inn, 2203 Fowler Street, in Fort Myers. Dinners, Cantonese-style, are $3 to $5.50. Hours are 11:30 A.M. to 9 P.M. every day and reservations are required on the weekend. The telephone number is 813-334-0466. The Elegant Pelican, at 2480 Edwards Drive, stands across from the Yacht Basin in downtown Fort Myers and features Continental cuisine, including a number of dishes cooked at your table by the waiters. Prices range from $6.75 to $19.50 (for a Chateaubriand for two). Reservations can be made by calling 813-332-2604. Dinner is served from 5:30 to 10:30 P.M. daily. The Levee, at 1375 Hendry Street, across from the Exhibition Hall in Fort Myers, features Dixieland jazz and Gay 90's sing-alongs with its steaks and seafood. Prices are in the $4.95-$8.95 range, and reservations are not required. Dinner is served from 5 to 11 P.M. on Sunday, until midnight Monday through Thursday, and until 2 A.M. on Friday and Saturday. The telephone number is 813-334-9967.

LODGINGS — The South Seas Plantation, a luxury resort occupying about 300 acres at the north end of Captiva Island, was once a Key lime plantation and it retains the relaxed elegance of bygone years. The resort has its own beaches on the Gulf (almost two miles of them), a deep-water yacht basin, nine-hole golf course, tennis courts, restaurants and shops. Accommodations range from rooms in the main "Plantation House" ($57 a day for two) to two-bedroom villas that rent for $90 a day for two (rates here and elsewhere in the area go down considerably after May 1). The telephone number is 813-472-1551. There are only about 1,000 rooms available in all of Sanibel and Captiva Islands, and anyone hoping to rent one should make reservations well in advance. The Sanibel-Captiva Chamber of Commerce can help with information about what's available. Typical of the many good—and varied—places to stay on Sanibel are the Island Inn, five miles northwest of the causeway on Gulf Drive, and the Beachview Cottages, at 3306 West Gulf Drive. The Island Inn has a heated swimming pool and tennis courts among other amenities and charges $52 to $57 a day for two persons on the Modified American Plan (breakfast and dinner included); the number is 813-472-1561. The Beachview has modest housekeeping cottages right on the beach; rates range from $165 to $240 a week for two. The cottages can be reserved by calling 813-472-1202. At Fort Myers Beach all the action is along Estero Boulevard, where more than a dozen top-quality motels stand shoulder to shoulder. Representative of these are the Holiday Inn (tel.: 813-463-5711), which charges $27 a day for one person and $34 for two, and the Estero Island Inn (tel. 813-463-6116), where the rates are $22 to $36.50 for efficiency rooms with two beds. In Fort Myers proper, most major chains have hotels near the downtown area. Closest to the airport are the Rodeway Inn (tel.: 813-936-3229), at 4811 Cleveland Avenue, which charges $18 for one person and $22 for two, and the Sheraton Inn (tel.: 813-936-4300), at 8900 S. Tamiami Trail, where rates are $24 for one and $27 for two. A number of the area's least expensive, yet pleasant, motels stand along State Route 80 on the eastern fringes of Fort Myers. One of the nicest ones is the Rock Lake Motel, about a mile east of downtown, which consists of nine individual cottages around a circular pond. Rates are $14 for one or two persons, and the number is 813-334-3242. Two other good buys are the Days Inn (tel.: 813-995-0535) and the Econo-Travel Motel (tel.: 813-995-0571) right next to it on U.S. 41, just north of the Caloosahatchee Bridge entrance to Fort Myers from the north. At the Days Inn, the rates are $13.88 for one person, $16.88 for two and at Econo-Travel, a room for one costs $10.13, for two, $13.25-$16.37. A useful accommodations and restaurant guide to the area is available from the Fort Myers-Lee County Chamber of Commerce, P. O. Box CC, Fort Myers, Fla. 33902 tel.: 813-334-1133).

SHOPPING—One of the really unusual stores in the area is called the Shell Factory, although the owners don't actually manufacture shells (they do fashion ornaments with natural seashells, though). It's off U.S. 41, about six miles north of Fort Myers, and the general manager, Tony Castelli, estimates that close to a million visitors stop by every year. Besides a variety of imported goods, the store has a wide selection of plants, craft items, rattan furniture, gourmet foods, clothing—and, of course, seashells. These come from as far away as the Philippines and New Zealand, as well as from nearby Sanibel and Captiva; they range in price from 15 cents for a Mexican orange scallop to $8.95 for a horse conch and as much as $1,000 for a rare Japanese shell on sale called Guttata-Gemlin. There are also displays of rare fish. The store is open from 8 A.M. to 7 P.M. every day, and there are 720 free parking spaces. Another popular stop is Periwinkle Place, 2075 Periwinkle Way, on Sanibel Island, a cluster of stores in wood-framed, small buildings arranged around a landscaped court and decorative fountain. There are clothing, candy, cheese, silver and home furnishings stores, among others. For a more conventional shopping center, the Edison Mall in Fort Myers, at U.S. 41 and Winkler Road, has branches of several department stores.

TRANSPORTATION — Although the distances appear moderate on the map, driving to Fort Myers from Tampa or Miami will test the endurance of the most saintly since the single artery, U.S. 41, is outdated and usually clogged with traffic. A new Lee County airport terminal was completed late last year at Page Field, and National and Eastern Air Lines are providing relatively frequent scheduled flights from all major cities; Florida Air Lines connects Fort Myers with major cities in the state. The airport is only about three miles south of the downtown area, at the intersection of U.S. 41 and North Airport Road. A cab ride downtown is $1, and the fare to the entrance to Sanibel Island is $12. Having your own car or renting one is highly recommended, since the fleet of Mercedes-Benz minibuses operated by the Lee County Transit Authority (basic fare: 30 cents) can hardly meet the needs of a visitor who wants to visit the beaches and other attractions of the sprawling area. There is, for example, no public bus transportation to Sanibel, Fort Myers Beach or other outlying points. Avis, Budget and National car rental companies have counters at the airport, and Hertz is right across the street.

Buildings Speak to Us; Here's How to Listen

that Philip Johnson's design for the floor of New York University's Bobst Library was copied from Palladio's great church of San Giorgio Maggiore in Venice. The viewer should ask why he used such a floor (a sort of op-art pattern of white, black and gray marble) and how well it does its job.

So the process of looking at architecture is a process of searching for a message. To work, the message must be clear—but it obviously need not be simple. Buildings work on several levels at once, and so do their messages. Basically, there are three different kinds of messages transmitted by a building, and the best architecture is able to communicate to the viewer in each category.

The Building as Object

What does the building look like? Is it pleasurable? What is the emotional reaction you have to the building as a pure object? Is it totally new to you, or does it call to mind some sort of historical precedent? One of the things good architecture does is take advantage of the store of associations we all have in our minds.

Evaluate the facade—is there a reason the building looks as it does, or is it merely an architect's whim? In a building like Grand Central Terminal, for example, the huge windows prepare us for the enormous concourse space within. The sculptural group atop the facade pulls the composition of windows, columns and cornices together; it is much more than mere decoration.

. . . An Object Among Objects

Broaden your visual field; stop looking at a building as an isolated object. What message is the building communicating to its neighboring buildings? Does it want to stand apart in the city or does it respect the line of the street or perhaps continue a cornice line from its neighbors? Contextual relationships are never simple—sometimes an all-glass building can be more successfully related to an old brick warehouse than two old brick structures can be to each other—but such concern with context is an essential quality of good urban architecture.

. . . As Interior Space

A building's use of interior space may be the quintessential architectural message. To the architects of the great French Ecole des Beaux-Arts, the school that influenced so much 19th-century architecture in America, the arrangement of rooms—the plan, as architects call it—was the essence of the building, from which all else derived. Indeed, many modern architects, reacting against an excessive concern with buildings as pure forms, are suggesting a return to Beaux-Arts principles.

Look at a building's interior space from a practical standpoint. Do rooms connect logically with one another? Do you always have a sense of where you are in relation to the building as a whole, or does the arrangement of rooms strike you as capricious and more concerned with some sort of abstract pattern than with rational use? (Not that rooms arranged in a geometric pattern need necessarily be practical. Sometimes functional purposes are better served by irregular arrangements.)

There is another aspect to the evaluation of a building's interior, and it virtually defies definition; I mean, the nature of space itself. Le Corbusier, the great French architect, spoke of "ineffable space" as a quality he sought in his architecture—and there is something ineffable, impossible to grasp, in virtually all of the great rooms.

Can one really explain what it is that makes the space of the nave of Chartres Cathedral so moving? One can talk all day about the stained glass and the sculpture, but the space eludes understanding. So it is, too, with the tiny breakfast room in the London house of Sir John Soane, the British architect of the early 19th century, a room so small that it would disappear in the nave of Chartres—but a room whose complex combination of canopy, mirrors and columns creates a subtle and mysterious sense of tension between openness and enclosure.

Yet there are ways to look at space and try to begin to understand it. As with the facade, the best place to begin is with your own very personal reactions. Does the room make you feel grand and ennobled? Does it humble you? Do you feel driven to the center or, conversely, do you feel compelled to stay around the edges? Do you want to stand still, or does it make you want to move? Rooms can do any of these things and work, or any of these things and not work. Because perception of space is so personal a phenomenon, it is best to trust your own feelings here.

The Hyatt Regency Hotel was built in Atlanta in 1967 as a deliberate antidote to Holiday Inn dreariness by architect and developer John Portman; it is now the model for perhaps two dozen major hotels around the world. Let's begin looking at it the way we should look at any building, with an attempt to find its essential idea. Sometimes that idea may be something having to do with form or shape—something that falls into our category of the building as object. Sometimes it may have to do with the way the building relates to other things around it in the cityscape—the building as object among other objects. And sometimes the essential idea may have to do with interior space and the way it is arranged and designed.

What is unique about the Hyatt Regency is the fact that its rooms are arranged around a central atrium, a covered court rising the entire 220-foot height of the building. The balconies are the corridors, and the atrium itself is filled with cafes, sculpture and fountains. Glass elevators decorated with rows of tiny bulbs glide slowly up and down one side of the great room.

The huge atrium, then, is the central idea of the Hyatt Regency. Look carefully: How do people move through it? Is there a clear sense of direction, or is it a bit confused in its organization? And does the room communicate well to you as a pure space? It is spectacular indeed, but do you not feel, as many visitors do, that it is also a bit cluttered?

Such questions should start you thinking about how and why the architect made the building as he did—and this, in turn, opens up another area for analysis that goes beyond pure form, and into what we might call, for want of another term, social values.

Social values are extremely important at the Hyatt Regency, for architect Portman wanted the building to be a strong rebuke to the sterile glass boxes of Third Avenue in New York and so many other downtowns. He understood that we respect cities not only for their physical grandeur, but for the values of diversity, liveliness and constant change, and this is what he tried to introduce into the Hyatt Regency—something approximating a notion of the city as carnival. Thus, the cluttered feeling.

From the outside, the Hyatt Regency is a fairly ordinary concrete structure. As an object among other objects, it does little for Atlanta, with a facade not so different from the Holiday Inns it tries to break away from. But there is a skilled architectural hand at work here nonetheless. When you enter, you are under a low ceiling in a long, tube-like corridor. Suddenly, the atrium bursts upon you, its great height even more dramatically pronounced, thanks to the contrast with the low entrance.

Architectural elements are used to create the sense of drama and excitement. Bold forms, huge space, active movement create the effects. Compare it to other public buildings designed mainly for entertainment—Miami Beach hotels, for example. There, fairly ordinary rooms are lavishly dressed up with pretentious chandeliers, furniture, curtains and other accoutrements of elegance, but they are no more than stage sets. The Hyatt Regency uses form and space dramatically to make us begin to ponder what they mean. Indeed, when you walk through it, the building makes you think about architecture—not about interior decoration but about deeper underlying concepts. It is still something fa

... the tower is dwarfed by sur... buildings, but look at it from ...e—its urbanistic relationships ...l. It no longer towers above ...bors, but rather anchors them; ... of Trinity at the end of ... canyon of Wall Street is ...ew York's most powerful urban ... was never planned that way, ...a, but it works—a reminder ...urban architecture, as the historian Vincent Scully once wrote, represents communication across generations over time.

Inside is a handsome, but not remarkable, nave. The plaster ceiling is hung from wood trusses, something never done in real Gothic churches which had stone vaults in the ceiling, the powerful lateral thrust of which was balanced by strong buttresses on the exterior walls. There are no real buttresses at Trinity, merely decorative echoes of them. The false buttresses will be disturbing to the rationalist, but they are fine from a purely visual standpoint as exterior elements—a reminder that an element of a building can function in a number of different ways at once.

The business of looking at buildings becomes at once easier and more difficult when the subject is something rather crude and unattractive. It is easier in that there is always the temptation to dismiss the building outright; it is more difficult in that it is often harder to pin down why a building does not work than why it does.

The new J. Edgar Hoover Building in Washington, the F.B.I. headquarters, is a huge mass of precast concrete, filling a full block along Pennsylvania Avenue between the White House and the Capitol. A relatively low wing runs along the avenue and two side streets; there is a central courtyard and then a higher wing runs along the back. The high wing appears to be set on heavy piers, and the ground level sections are designed to look as if they had been slid beneath the piers.

What is the central idea here? It is hard to tell, unless it was merely an attempt on the part of the architects, C. F. Murphy Associates of Chicago, to create an image of heaviness and brutality. The building is in that heavy precast concrete style that has come, in fact, to be called brutalism, and it derives from work in the 1950's by Le Corbusier. But where Le Corbusier's great monastery at La Tourette, France, of 1955 with heavy sections atop piers was a knowing exploitation of a hillside site, the heavy massing of the Hoover Building has no similar rationale.

The size and the monotony of the forms contribute a great deal to the pretentious and overbearing quality. But they are not the only factors: look at the building along Pennsylvania Avenue, where a cold, austere wall greets pedestrians. There is nothing to tie the building to the pedestrian experience; it makes little attempt to relate to the city in which it is set.

The court inside is a mass of cold concrete, and it seems to have no clear pattern of organization. Indeed, the entire building has a confused layout. One F.B.I. man got lost taking reporters through on a pre-opening tour.

Beyond the court, twin three-story arcades cut through the high rear wing to the street behind. They are a sloppy attempt to be inviting as well as noble. For true grandeur the arcades substitute mere size, and end up looking Kafkaesque. Since image is important in architecture, there is a temptation to call this building a success: It symbolizes the cold, impersonal world of Federal bureaucracy so well.

Sometimes the category of object among other objects is really the only one that matters. An urban street, for example, can be a greater piece of architecture than anything on it, and it need not be the Champs Elysees. A good case in point is upper Madison Avenue in New York City.

Above 59th Street, Madison is a staggering array of elegant shops and boutiques, with fine townhouses lining the adjacent side streets. There are new visual images with every step—cast-iron fronts (the gallery building at No. 794), dramatic, if showy, modernism (Halston's slant-fronted show windows at 68th street) and simple, restrained elegance (few of the myriad of boutiques are extraordinary in themselves, but none ever seem dull).

Together, the mixture of old brownstones and apartment houses is a jumble; completely unplanned, yet it works beautifully. Why? Because the stores are varied and interesting, and always effective at pedestrian scale, unlike highway stores whose signs are meant to be read from behind the wheel. Here the pace is slow, the style refined, the scale small.

But most important, Madison Avenue is a place of balance. The objects one sees are different enough to provide variety and continual visual interest, yet never so different to be jarring. A McDonald's outlet would no more fit among the stores of Madison Avenue than it would in the middle of Central Park. But the wonder of Madison Avenue is that it does not swing too far in the anti-McDonald's direction; it is not too prissy and genteel, and the storefronts are never in search of a too-easy similarity.

Another factor in Madison Avenue's success is that its different buildings create a "street wall"—the even line of building facades that appears to run almost to infinity. It is a New York characteristic, a crucial element to the cityscape, and something that was destroyed by the pretentious curved-front skyscrapers of recent years on West 42nd Street and West 57th Street. They break the wall; everything on Madison keeps it—a good reminder that in city architecture, the whole is more important than the sum of its parts.

Let's look, finally, at one complex that seems to pull all of the concerns of urban architecture together with astonishing success. It is the IDS Center, a multi-building grouping completed in Minneapolis in 1972 for Investors Diversified Services to the designs of Philip Johnson and John Burgee of New York, in association with Edward F. Baker Associates of Minneapolis.

IDS is a combination office tower, hotel and retail center—the sort of mixed-use complex we are seeing more and more of these days, thanks to a belated recognition that isolated uses (such as buildings that function only as office structures) do little to add to the vitality of downtowns.

So IDS, first, is making a social statement, a statement in favor of the urban values we saw affirmed in the Portman Hyatt Regency Hotel in Atlanta, and, in a more accidental but no less successful fashion, along Madison Avenue in New York. But unlike either the Hyatt Regency or Madison Avenue, IDS has real significance as sophisticated architectural form. Let's take a look at the complex as an object.

The dominant section is a 51-story tower of mirrored glass, and it is in the shape of an elongated octagon, with long sides and short ends. The tower is on one side of a square block in the center of Minneapolis—a lower hotel wing fills another side, and low-rise retail wings complete the square. The structures all open onto a central glass-covered space, named the Crystal Court. The court's roof is a pile of glass and steel pyramids, about 12 stories high at its peak.

The central court is really the essence of the scheme—it is the organizing idea behind both the form and the social values of the complex, since it is intended to function as an interior piazza for downtown Minneapolis. It is an irregular space, its shape determined by patterns of movement between the structures around it. Diagonal "pathways" were created through the huge open space by placement of doors in particular points, and the shape of the room was intended to focus movement and attention along these directional paths.

The Crystal Court is at once an interior space and an exterior one, since it is covered and protected, yet entirely public and open to other buildings. The architects deliberately sought a balance between its inside and outside functions—the space feels enclosed enough to offer a psychological respite from the difficult Minneapolis climate, and yet open enough to encourage Minneapolitans to indulge in the traditional urban activities of people-watching and chance meetings that, in Europe, take place in open piazzas.

The notion of viewing a building as an object among other objects becomes a bit more complicated here, since IDS is itself a grouping of several buildings. We must, first, look at them together, where it will become clear that they are carefully proportioned and related to one another—the big tower clearly dominates, but the mid-size hotel provides an important balance for the composition. And the stepped-down quality of the glass roof over the court is a graceful transition from the height of the large building to the low retail levels.

On the level of "object among objects"—IDS as a totality against the rest of the Minneapolis cityscape — the grouping remains successful. The tower, for example, is different from the typical glass box: its octagonal shape, the diagonal sides of which are zigzagged, has the advantage of breaking up the huge mass and making it appear more modest in the skyline. And the turquoise mirror glass helps in this way, too.

The interiors are not really notable beyond the Crystal Court; the hotel, in fact, uses the court as its lobby, and guests enter through smaller, more intimate spaces that are really just vestibules. (The hotel's restaurants overlook the court as balconies, a gesture that both adds excitement to the dining experience and visual interest to the court.) The inside of the tower is more formal, and more elegant, than most glass-and-steel skyscrapers. Architect Philip Johnson borrowed a number of details, such as the two-story travertine lobby washed by hidden quartz lights, from the Seagram Building in New York, which he designed in association with Mies van der Rohe in the mid-1950's and which is generally considered the greatest of all glass towers.

Knowing Seagram makes it easier to appreciate IDS, of course—a certain knowledge of the history of architecture always helps. Similarly, a knowledge of Gothic architecture helps one's understanding of Trinity Church. But your own perceptions matter more—at least when they are based on something substantial, like a serious attempt to understand what an architect is after and how well it succeeds within these criteria.

I have deliberately not mentioned the word "taste" up to now, not because taste is invalid but because it isn't really what we are talking about. Taste, even among the most sophisticated critics, is essentially superficial. It is the first impression, largely intuitive and based heavily on prior experience. When you go beyond your own taste, when you are able to put aside your initial emotional reaction so that you can think seriously about what an architect is trying to do—even if, in the end, you decide he has failed—then you will begin to know how to look at buildings.

Where Melville Wrote Of a Great White Whale

long-staying kin. Only 14.1 acres remain of the original 160-acre tract of farmland that Melville bought, house and outbuildings included, for $6,500. The piazza is gone from the house, and inside considerable alteration has been done over the years by a series of owners. But the house, which dates from 1780, is sound, and the chimney is as the chimney was. Intact, too, are the chimney-stone and wall-panel inscriptions, freely adapted in text and spelling, from "I and My Chimney," and set in place by Melville's brother Allan, a later owner of Arrowhead:

The Root of the matter. "This is a most remarkable structure, Sir." "Yes," said I, "everyone says so." "The magnitude of this foundation, Sir! Twelve feet square; one hundred and forty-four square feet! Sir, this house would appear to have been built simply for the accommodation of your chimney." "Yes, my chimney and me."

I And My Chimney; as Cardinal Wolsey used to say, I and my King. Yet this egotistic way of speaking, wherein I take precedence of my chimney, is hardly borne out by the facts: in everything, except the above phrase, my chimney taking precedence of one. My chimney is grand signor here—the one great domineering object of the house, which is accommodated not to my wants but my chimney's.

He has the center of the house to himself, leaving but the odd holes and corners to me.

There is considerable work to be done around Arrowhead to return the house to what it was in Melville's time. Partitions must come down, fireplaces unbricked, doors returned to old openings, and maybe a stairway redirected—although the latter project is uncertain. The present stairway is roomier and safer, while the original one might not conform to Massachusetts building codes. In any case, all this is less a problem of carpentry than it is a challenge of fund-raising and of time. The restoration of Arrowhead represents a $250,000 commitment on the part of the Berkshire County Historical Society, Arrowhead's new proprietors. As a registered National Landmark, Arrowhead is eligible for matching government grants, but that still leaves the better part of $125,000 to be raised from other sources; $25,000 has already been pledged by the board of directors of the society.

How is the money being used? More than $4,000 is going for renewal of the chimney room and the northeast bedroom, the upstairs study where Melville built his fire and wrote with such intensity for such long stretches that his family feared for his health. Another $11,000 is required for restoration of the piazza, the front entrance, the barn and a picket fence along what is now Holmes Road—Wendell Street in Melville's time. (The street was renamed years ago in honor of the then more celebrated Oliver Wendell Holmes whose country place was a mile down the road from Melville's.)

The restoration process will extend over several years, according to Donald S. Smith, president of the Berkshire County Historical Society and curator in residence of the Arrowhead property. But this will not delay the opening of Arrowhead to the public on Saturday, nor a more formal opening planned in June.

"The restoration is being arranged so that only one project will be worked on at a time," Smith said, by way of reassuring early visitors that they will not find themselves competing with an army of carpenters. "Naturally, we will be better able to manage in June than in May, but we said we would be in the business of receiving people on May 1, and we will be. We anticipate, actually, that many people will be greatly interested in seeing a restoration in progress."

Visitors to Arrowhead will find five rooms available for viewing, including the chimney room, which was the original kitchen, and the upstairs room where Melville did his writing. On display will be numerous Melville artifacts: his spectacles, books from his library, iron-stone chinaware from the Melville dinner table, an unsigned gouache that brought a dash of color and a touch of Greylock indoors. Also, there will be mementos of Melville's second daughter and fourth child, Frances, who was born at Arrowhead—her toy cupboard and tin utensils, for example.

Two other rooms of Arrowhead are being given over to period furniture and material relating to Berkshire County history. Another area is designed as the public room of an inn, in order to reflect the earliest, pre-Melville history of the house. Except for the barn, which will be ready for interior viewing by late summer, no major section of Arrowhead or the grounds will be off-limits during the restoration process. Smith does advise, however, that groups larger than family size make reservations beforehand, either by writing Arrowhead (780 Holmes Road, Pittsfield, Mass. 01201) or by telephoning (413-442-1793). There will be guided tours as of Saturday, handled by volunteers of the Historical Society.

The society acquired Arrowhead on April 25, 1975, for $100,000. It was a purchase the society could not particularly afford but one it could not pass up. The society already owned three properties and, as William H. Pierson, retired Williams College professor and a former society president, said, "the very thought of adding another and even larger holding seemed to be nothing short of madness."

"At the same time," Pierson continued, "every reasonable indicator pointed to the fact that if the society was to flourish and grow, the acquisition of Melville's house offered the greatest promise of all the options it had ever had or, indeed, that might ever come its way." The society took the plunge. It disposed of its Headquarters House in Pittsfield, Goodrich House, also in Pittsfield, and Citizens Hall in nearby Stockbridge, and put the money toward Arrowhead. It was a gamble as safe as tomorrow's dawn.

When Herman Melville came to Arrowhead—on "the hither side of Pittsfield," as Hawthorne would have it—he enjoyed a notoriety as the man who had adventured in the Pacific, "had lived among the cannibals," and survived to tell his stories in "Typee" (1846) and "Omoo" (1847), books that fed popular reading tastes for tales of the world beyond American horizons. The books grew out of Melville's amazing experiences, first as a teen-age cabin boy on the Highlander out of New York bound for Liverpool, then as a crew hand on the whalers Acushnet, Lucy Ann and Charles & Henry in the South Seas.

Not everyone believed those tales of "Typee" and "Omoo," so exotic were the adventures. Reviewers debated Melville's veracity and the credibility of his narratives. Publishers grappled with the problem of classification. Was Melville writing fact or fiction, travelogue or novel? (Actually, there were elements of all.)

Nor were Christian believers and patriotic chauvinists settled in mind about the books. Religious folk bristled over Melville's negative impressions about the eastward flow of Christian civilization; the natives, he would write, "had been civilized into draft horses, and evangelized into beasts of burden." Patriots caught upsetting hints of sentiments that would burst full bloom in "Mardi," Melville's third book—such as the unglamorous idea that Britain lost the Revolutionary War less at the hands of Americans than of geography; such as, too, the notion that the United States was hardly the land of the free while blacks were enslaved. In one episode of "Mardi," a man with the red stripes of the lash across his back raises a correspondingly striped tapa standard in a so-called Temple of Freedom. The analogy was not so subtle as to be missed.

Melville settled in Pittsfield in 1850, hopeful of recapturing the contentedness he knew from earlier stays in the community, and that he sensed he needed to feel again as a serious writer. He had been born in New York City, Aug. 1, 1819, and had grown up in the Albany area. But he had relatives in Pittsfield, and had many pleasant visits there. When and his young wife—the former zabeth Knapp Shaw, daughter of muel Shaw, Chief Justice of the preme Judicial Court of Massachus—wearied of their early living arrangment, a shared house at 103 Fo Avenue in New York City, Pitts seemed a logical place to which turn.

For Melville, Pittsfield represe tranquillity and stability, and fo time both were his. Moreover, Pitts would prove stimulating in ways for him New York was not.

Nathaniel Hawthorne was als away, busy on "The House of Seven Gables," and the two began friendship that was to mean so m to Melville until it formalized, in ville's enduring disappointment. Hol was back and forth from Boston to Pittsfield home. Book editor and p rapher Evert Duyckinck would c by, as would others of New Yo literary fraternity who were sojour in the Berkshires.

It was, in sum, a good time be in western Massachusetts. T were the inevitable farm chores be done—planting and hoeing, hay ing and storing; crops ranging f potatoes to apples. But this wi went well. Under the shadow of G lock and in the quiet of rural Pitts Ahab, Starbuck, Queequeg, Isha Father Mapple and the rest of "M Dick's" immortal cast took on f For Melville, "Moby Dick" was a ferent kind of book. He had fished the waters of autobiographical exp ences, and had launched out now philosophical and psychological de in order to probe the meaning of l and evil, of truth, and of life it His devices were his knowledge whaling and an allegorical story inv ing a whale called Moby Dick.

Moby Dick, incidentally, was no ment of Melville's imagination. M strous sperm whales that could s in a ship or crush a whaleboat wi snap of their jaws were for years talk of the ports of the Atlantic 1820, the Essex, a Nantucket wh went down after being attacked b huge sperm whale, and for 20 ye no less, tales were rampant of thi rocious white whale that Melville to immortalize. The whale was Mo Dick, and was in mid-terror when ville completed "Moby Dick" in 1 Before he was finally killed in 1 Mocha Dick had caused the death more than 30 seamen.

Paradoxically, the great white w was also to do Melville in, psycho cally and professionally. "Moby D was an agony of effort—a l "broiled" in "hell-fire," by Melv expression to Hawthorne. Melville no idea that he had created a ma piece, but he knew he had wr a good book and he had high h for its success, particularly after H thorne, to whom "Moby Dick" dedicated, reacted affirmatively.

Walter Scott

For Melville, Arrowhead represented tranquillity and stability, and for a time both were his. But when "Moby Dick" failed and debts grew, he decided to leave.

If You Go . . .

. . . to Arrowhead from New York City, plan on a three-hour drive and a distance of about 150 miles. Drivers should pick up Interstate 684 from the Hutchinson River Parkway and proceed to the I-84 junction. There one has a choice of the Taconic State Parkway or State Route 22 north. Route 22 is slower but shorter. Drivers taking Route 22 should turn east on State Route 23 at Hillsdale, N.Y., and connect with U.S. 7 in Massachusetts going north. Route 7 will mesh with U.S. 20 in Lenox, and pass within a half-mile of Herman Melville's home. Watch for Holmes Road running off Routes 7 and 20 in Lenox. Arrowhead is at 780 Holmes Road, a short distance across the Lenox-Pittsfield line. It is an imposing white frame farmhouse with a granite marker out front identifying it as the residence for 13 years of Herman Melville, "Mariner and Mystic."

Via the New York State Thruway/Massachusetts Turnpike (connecting as I-90), drivers may exit at Lee and head toward Pittsfield and Arrowhead on U.S. 20.

From May 1 to Oct. 31, Arrowhead will be open Mondays through Saturdays, Tuesdays excepted, from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. Sunday hours will be from 1 to 5 P.M. From Nov. 1 to April 30, Arrowhead will be open Tuesdays through Sundays from 2 to 5 P.M.

Admission is $1 for adults and 50 cents for children and students.

As debts pressed in, Melville looked to dispose of Arrowhead. In 1853 he offered the site to local authorities as the location for an insane asylum. When this deal fell through, he sold off 80 acres, "more or less," to George S. Wills for $5,500, completing the transaction in April, 1856. That sum helped, but only for a time. Four years later Melville's in-laws intervened again, arranging for the purchase of Arrowhead from Herman and its transfer to his wife, Elizabeth. This discharged Melville's substantial loan indebtedness to Judge Shaw, totaling almost $7,000, and provided Elizabeth an early advance against her family legacy. But it was not the end to their struggles. Melville had hoped for a State Department appointment to a foreign consulate but it fell through, and he and his wife closed up Arrowhead and moved initially into Pittsfield proper, then to New York City. Melville used some precious financial reserve to pay off his remaining $200 debt to Harper's, thus getting off his back and out of mind his "annual reminder," in one biographer's words, of his lack of success as a writer. Then he went to work in 1866 on his $4-a-day job as deputy inspector of customs in offices at 207 West Street.

Melville got that appointment partially through acquaintanceship with the new collector of customs; partially too on the basis of his patriotic poetry. It was no plum of a job, but Melville kept at it for 19 years, serving patiently as a minor public servant, while the world forgot him as an artist—this, despite the fact that his early books were creeping back into print.

Death came to Herman Melville as unspectacularly as the life that family and critics had imposed upon him. He died just after midnight on Sept. 28, 1891, of "Cardiac dilatation, Mitral regurgigation [and] Contributory Asthenia"—at home, 104 East 26th Street, where his family would have him; and virtually anonymous, as his critics would have decreed as being meet and just. The funeral notices were brief, most agreeing that his popularity as a writer ended about 1853 and that his most famous book was "Typee." One paper observed that "even his own generation had long thought him dead, so quiet have been the later years of his life."

The remains were consigned to Woodlawn Cemetery in the North Bronx, near Yonkers. A small piece of marble told what seemed to have been the whole story:

Herman Melville
Born August 1, 1819
Died September 28, 1891

History's verdict was otherwise.

Bahamas Goombay Holiday '76

The beat goes on

Bahamas Goombay Holiday begins on May 1st and goes on nonstop through August 31st.

The throbbing beat of Goombay music fills the nights.

Jump-In dancing parades fill the streets and you can jump in and dance right along.

You can take a moonlight cruise with more dancing and dining. Try your luck at our casinos. Or keep up the beat into the wee hours at late night spots.

Goombay night life in The Bahamas is really something.

And so is the day life.

We have more golf, more tennis, more skin and scuba diving than any other island destination.

We have an International Bazaar where you can buy just about anything from anywhere in the world.

We have Bahamian folklore and fashion shows.

You can eat Bahamian foods like conch chowder, lobster, Johnny cake and soursop ice cream.

Drink Bahamian drinks like a Goombay Smash, Bahama Mama and Shame & Scandal.

Whenever you want, you can just take it easy on our beautiful, white sand beaches and relax in our crystal-clear, turquoise waters.

And wherever you go in The Bahamas, our people are as warm as our sunshine.

The beat goes on in Nassau/ Paradise Island for $73 to $282.

Nassau/Paradise Island combines the charm of quaint streets, historic buildings and a native straw market with modern hotels, great restaurants, night life and a casino. The price includes your hotel for 8 days and 7 nights, airport transfers, welcome Goombay drink, tickets to the famous Sound & Light Show and other extras.

The beat goes on in Freeport/ Lucaya for $83 to $244.

Very few vacation spots offer the excitement of Freeport/Lucaya. Everything from water sports, golf and tennis to El Casino and night life that just won't quit. The price includes your hotel for 8 days and 7 nights, welcome Goombay drink, double-decker sightseeing bus tour, admission to a native nightclub show and other extras.

The beat goes on in our Out Islands for $77 to $168.

The Out Islands of The Bahamas are into Goombay Holiday, too. Abaco, Andros, Eleuthera, Exuma and our other islands have celebrations of their own. On a smaller scale, but it's just as much fun. And it may be just the kind of fun for you. Especially if you go for miles of white sand beaches, turquoise water and the easygoing life.

See your travel agent.

These vacation prices are per person, based on double-occupancy hotel room and don't include air fare.

We have many other Goombay vacation packages, including some with special golf, tennis and scuba features.

For information or reservations, or a copy of our Goombay Holiday brochure with vacation packages, see your travel agent. Or call us toll free at (800) 327-0787.

And have yourself a Goombay Holiday this summer.

A HOLLAND AMERICA SHIP WILL GET YOU ON VACATION FASTER THAN ANY AIRPLANE.

An airplane is designed to shorten travel time. A Holland America cruise ship is designed to do away with it completely. By turning it into vacation time.

So while airplane passengers do things like circle airports, Holland America passengers do things like circle dance floors.

And while airplane passengers enjoy a seat in a spacious cabin with hundreds of other people, Holland America passengers enjoy a spacious private cabin with all the comforts of home.

Then as your Holland America ship cruises from New York, you can drive golf balls into the world's bluest green, enjoy the view from the bridge or play bridge and bask in the sun. There are also first run movies, first-rate entertainers and all the dancing you can stand.

And Holland America not only serves superb meals, but offers a choice of mealtimes most convenient for you. Plus a midnight buffet and 24-hour room service. And no tipping required.

If you'd like to squeeze all this vacation into just 7 days, take off on Holland America's s.s. Statendam to Bermuda (with 3 days at sea and 4 days at Front St. in downtown Hamilton). Or on the s.s. Rotterdam to Nassau and Bermuda. For even more vacation try one of the s.s. Veendam's 10 or 11-day Caribbean cruises. Each ship offers the elegance of an international resort and the experience of a cruise line that's been cruising the world for 103 years.

So why waste time flying? Call your travel agent or check the schedule below and mail it with your name and address to Holland America Cruises, 2 Penn Plaza, New York, 10001. Or call (212) 760-3880.

Retracing The Attack On Quebec

regulars that could not be reinforced or resupplied until warm weather reopened the St. Lawrence to navigation. They turned Arnold down cold and bombarded his men from the walls. Arnold withdrew to Pointe aux Trembles, now the village of Neuville 20 miles west of Quebec on Route 138. A monument in front of the Convent de Neuville mentions a 1775 "cannonade d'Arnold et Montgomery" that brought down the convent's walls, an action not included in accounts of the invasion. There is, however, beside the monument an impressive souvenir of the "cannonade," a pyramid of cannon balls. Montgomery and 300 men joined with Arnold's army here on Dec. 2 wearing captured British red uniform jackets and bringing artillery, food and warm clothing. By Dec. 5, they were all back in siege positions outside Quebec. On Dec. 31, Arnold and Montgomery launched a midnight attack in a blinding snowstorm. While one force faked a frontal assault, Arnold led another around the walls to the lower town. Montgomery and 300 men followed the river from the opposite direction toward a planned link-up with Arnold for the final push.

An automobile road leads from the Parc des Champs de Bataille down to Wolfe's Cove, now filled in and sporting a colony of oil storage tanks. A left turn onto the Boulevard Champlain takes tourists along Montgomery's assault route. At Point Diamond, directly below Quebec's famed Citadel, a palisaded blockhouse stood in Montgomery's way. A plaque bolted to the cliff reads, "Here stood the undaunted fifty safeguarding Canada, defeating Montgomery at the Pres de Ville barricade on the last day of 1775," Guy Carleton commanding at Quebec," proving that there are two cheering sections to every war. Inside the blockhouse the 50 militamen and sailors had a small swivel gun. A party of "forlorn hopes" chopped an opening in the palisades and Montgomery and several aides, including Aaron Burr, stepped through. Someone in the blockhouse put a match to the gun. The blast killed Montgomery and two of his aides instantly. Burr escaped unhurt. The detachment retreated.

The next morning, Montgomery's body was carried to 79 Rue Saint Louis and prepared for burial. A plaque was placed on the house during the 1975 bicentennial celebration. The burial site is off Rue Saint Louis just inside the Saint Louis gate on the Côte de la Citadelle. In 1818 the body was removed and reinterred at St. Paul's Church in lower Broadway in Manhattan.

Arnold's route can be traced by following the city wall along a street called D'Auteuil to Rue Saint Jean, then down Saint Jean and left onto the Côte du Palais, which once bordered a palace replaced by the present Hotel-Dieu Hospital. Opposite the hospital a plaque on a building wall marks the site of the Palace Gate. Arnold and his men slipped along the walls that then ran at right angles to Côte du Palais, hoping the defenders would not see them. They were spotted at Palace Gate and pelted with crude hand grenades and exploding bomb shells. Côte Dinan follows Arnold's route into the lower town. A right turn onto Rue Saint Paul leads to the foot of Sault au Matelot (literally "sailor's leap"). Most of the streets in this part of Quebec, but none of the buildings, were in existence at the time of the siege.

A barricade erected near a guardhouse at the intersection of St. Paul and Sault au Matelot guarded the approach to the Côte de la Montagne, where Arnold and Montgomery were to meet for the final assault on Prescott Gate at the head of Montagne. Montgomery never showed up. Arnold was wounded, and handed over command to Daniel Morgan and painfully made his way through heavy fire to the rear. Morgan attacked the barricade, was repulsed at first, then captured it and took 50 prisoners, who proved to be his undoing. A second barricade 300 yards farther up the street at the intersection with Saint Jacques (the narrowest street on the continent), was virtually undefended. Short of men because some had to guard the prisoners and others were straggling, Morgan was dissuaded, against his better judgment, from storming the second barricade immediately. Instead he waited for daylight and reinforcements that never showed up. By morning, the defenders were in force around him and he had been cut off. On New Year's Day, he handed his sword to a priest in the crowd surrounding his men.

Morgan and his officers were taken to the Quebec Seminary next to the Basilique de Notre Dame at Buade and Rue Famille Streets and imprisoned in a room now open to public viewing. Reinforcements from England arrived in the spring and Carleton broke the American siege. A comeback was attempted in May at a poorly marked battle in Trois-Rivières midway between Montreal and Quebec, but the Americans ran into stiff opposition and retreated back down the Richelieu with Carleton hot on their heels.

Old Quebec may have been lost to the invading ancestors, but it is open today to anyone who wants to savor the 17th-century atmosphere. The view into the past is especially clear at night under the lamps of its ancient streets.

TRAVEL TRAVEL TRAVEL TRAVEL TRAVEL

At last. A Panama Canal cruise that includes Glacier Bay.

Of all the cruises we offer in every part of the world, our Trans-Canal cruises between Florida and California are among the most popular.

Followed closely by our Alaska/Canada cruises.

So it was only logical to put the two together. And that's what we've done. On May 22, you can board ship in New York, sail to Ft. Lauderdale, and cruise with us all the way to Glacier Bay in 35 days.

First, you'll sail to the golden beaches of Caribbean islands. To colorful ports in Central and South America.

You'll have an unforgettable eight-hour daylight crossing of the Panama Canal. Through the huge locks. Over Gatun Lake. Past walls of dense tropical jungle that seem close enough to touch.

You'll cruise the Mexican Riviera. Call at Acapulco. And Puerto Vallarta.

We'll take you to Los Angeles. And San Francisco. Where you start another adventure entirely: our Alaska/Canada cruise.

You'll sail north to the charming Canadian ports of Victoria, Vancouver and Prince Rupert. To old Alaska frontier towns like Sitka. And Haines. To Juneau, the historic capital.

And then we'll take you all the way to spectacular Glacier Bay, where twenty colossal rivers of ice come together. And you'll have a full day's sailing to take it all in.

Finally, we'll take you back to California. With enough memories to last for years.

The entire cruise is 35 days. And every day of it, you'll enjoy the all First-Class sailing style of the Royal Viking Sea. Of Norwegian registry. And spirit. Designed to bring you all the comforts of a great hotel.

Your stateroom will be spacious and comfortable. With a sweeping view of the sea. (94% of all passengers have outside staterooms.)

The dining room is set high on an upper deck, walled with windows, and large enough to serve every passenger on board at a single, relaxed seating.

At dinner, you can choose from entrees like Braised Long Island Duckling Bigarrade. Veal Cordon Bleu. Choice Filet Mignon. You'll be impressed by the service too: there are three crew members for every five passengers.

And there's more to do on board than you'll find at most great resorts. There's skeet shooting. A gym. A sauna. A heated pool. You can browse in our library. Play bridge. Take in the lectures in our enrichment program. Catch a film in the ship's theater. And enjoy a whole variety of live entertainment in our lounges and bars.

For complete information—and reservations—see your travel agent. And see him soon. Or call us collect at 212-757-0921.

Is a Good "Singles" Tour for You?

There are special tour programs just made for "singles," people who love their independence, but who don't want to travel alone.

Perhaps one of the nicest things about these "singles" tours is that you get to meet more people who share your views about the places you visit.

A well-conducted program is run by experts who know how to keep the group together. If you are single, or you know someone who is, there are two "singles" tours from Finnair that have stood the test of time, and are among the ones highly preferred in this category.

Highlights of Scandinavia for singles

Like any other good tour, this one, too, is well thought out from a travel point of view. As its name implies, it touches on the "highlights" of Scandinavia. But it also takes you through the countryside, with enough depth so you are left with a really satisfying feeling about having seen all that you care to see.

The itinerary includes Stockholm, Helsinki, Oslo, and a trip through the fjords that is nothing short of spectacular. You also visit Bergen, and Helsinki — for a taste of surprising Finland, a part of Scandinavia often overlooked to the traveler's loss. All in all, you spend fifteen days going through one of the world's most fascinating regions at a time of year that most Americans find ideal.

Imagine — there's even a "Singles" Tour of Russia

Good company is welcome everywhere, so being able to share the companionship of other "singles" while visiting the Soviet Union is especially pleasant. But then, everything about this particular tour is a delight! It begins with four days in Moscow — and its museums, art galleries, Red Square, Lenin's Mausoleum and St. Basil's Cathedral are all included in the sightseeing. In the evenings, you enjoy thrilling entertainment, here in one of the world's capitals of music, dance and drama.

Next you fly to Kiev, capital of the Ukraine and home of the famous catacombs beneath the Pecharskaya Lavra Monastery. In addition to daytime sightseeing here, you enjoy an evening's entertainment.

Then you fly to Leningrad, where you will probably be as astonished as anyone to discover there are more than two million objets d'art housed within the famous Hermitage Museum! There's a stop at Tallinn on the Gulf of Finland, too, before a final visit to Helsinki and some sightseeing before returning home.

When you go there are special activities and entertainments planned for you on these "singles" tours, including a festive "welcome" dinner in Helsinki, "farewell" dinner in Copenhagen, and gratuitous cocktails in Scandinavia and Russia. Evening entertainment is also included, with a visit to Helsinki's leading nightclub, plus four evenings of theater in Russia. In Scandinavia there's a 2½-hour scenic fjord cruise in the itinerary. In Russia you enjoy gala dinners in Leningrad, Kiev and Moscow. Complete schedules for all tours can be obtained from Finnair, 580 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10036. For additional information on Finland, contact Finland National Tourist Office, 75 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, N.Y. 10019.

Finnair brings singles together

...is big for Rochester, very ...tories high, a block square, ...ms priced from $17 single ...a. And it is but one of hundreds of hotels, motels, guest homes and apartments. To handle the 200,000 patients a year, plus accompanying family members, plus the occasional tourist qua tourist, Rochester offers 3,500 rooms all told, from $5 up.

Somehow the word "clinic" conjures up a modest endeavor; the nine-building Mayo Clinic, with its $180 million physical plant, is anything but. It had its start in 1883 when a tornado swept through Rochester and devastated much of the then tiny town. The Sisters of St. Frances ministered to the injured, and out of their work came the opening of St. Mary's Hospital six years later. The medical staff consisted of Dr. William Worrall Mayo and his two sons.

The rest, as they say, is history—and I learned the details on a public tour of the facilities before my stay was done. Some 30,000 people a year make those nonmedical rounds. For the families of clinic patients, and for patients with time between examinations, the tour is one way to take your mind off your personal worries—though perhaps it's a little too relevant. The Mayo Medical Museum is another. And there are sites of interest to the visitor away from the clinic.

I was patient No. 3,124,216, reporting to the clinic reception area at 9 o'clock of a Monday morning. I arrived to find some 200 people sitting there and three lines standing at the registration desk—I figured I'd be waiting there all day. In fact it was a short wait, and after filling in a form, and having been asked to wait again until my name was called, I had a chance to look around.

For all the size of the place, it was comfortable and pleasant: A mural of a village scene filled one wall, a window another . . . the high ceiling provided a sense of space . . . lighting fixtures made reading easy (also needlepoint and embroidery, which some patients were pursuing) . . . the couches and chairs were oversize. Two-thirds of the patients were women and ages ranged from the thirties to beyond my years. One nearby conversation was in Spanish—I'd already noted directional signs in that language as well as English.

Within 20 minutes I was on my way to the 16th floor and another big waiting room with its own mural and receptionists and oversized chairs. From one I received a medical form upon which I pleaded "not guilty" to the likes of insomnia and venereal disease and admitted that I had occasional nosebleeds.

"Mr. Brams," said the receptionist when I handed in my form. "It's going to be a while before your doctor will be able to see you. There's no need for you to sit here. Why don't you wander around, maybe get yourself a cup of coffee, and come back about 11:45?" I was appreciative: customarily, one sits and waits and wonders when his turn will come.

I returned to the main floor and an underground walkway active with traffic—some people moving briskly, some with aged slowness, a few here and there in wheelchairs. The walkway is part of an underground system comprising a mile and a half of pedestrian tunnels connecting the nine clinic buildings, the Methodist Hospital and the Kahler and Zumbro Hotels.

There are shops in these tunnels, some simple and plain, a few of snobbish high quality—capable of standing up beside a Madison Avenue boutique or a 57th Street specialty store in New York City. The drawing power of the clinic brings all classes to Rochester, including those who spend their time between appointments buying expensive clothing, jewelry or collector's cloisonne, jade and porcelain.

The Kahler Hotel lobby was well-filled, active. Some people were registering—I had done so earlier. My room was customary single-person size—bed, desk, two chairs, television and tile bath quite adequately outfitted with counter space and tub with shower fitting. Its window looked out on a typical Rochester downtown scene—plain, flat-roofed buildings, some with vacant lots in between.

In the lobby people sat about, talked, waited pickup—passing time is a preoccupation of clinic patients between tests, even more so for those accompanying them. Paging was unusual. That is to say, like the treatment throughout my stay, it was polite and pleasant: "Good morning, Mrs. Smith. Telephone call for Mrs. Smith."

I had coffee at a downstairs counter and returned to 16 West at 11:45. Almost precisely at noon my name was called, a nurse ushered me behind the reception area and I was led to an examination room. The doctor who was to handle my case walked in and introduced himself.

He was businesslike but pleasant. His examination was thorough. While I was dressing and he was writing some orders, I asked, "How do I shape up?" He pondered and half smiled. "We don't like to draw any conclusions at the start. Sometimes the examinations make us change our minds."

Logical, to be sure, but vaguely worrisome. Back in the reception area, I was told that a computer would set up a series of appointments for me, that I should return at 3 o'clock. I asked if 3:15 would be acceptable, since I had planned to take the 2 o'clock tour of the facilities, and I was given permission.

I walked outside and down the street. From a distance the soaring clinic buildings with their marble-and-glass walls contrast sharply with the two and three-story buildings of the business section. At the Green Parrot Restaurant near the hotel I asked if I could be served and get out in 30 minutes. The waitress smiled, assured me that would be easy. The meal, which cost me $1.65, was standard small town—clean, plain, no frills and rapidly served, as promised.

There were other meals later, and better ones. Like most patients, I found that the necessity for fasting before certain tests interfered with my dining schedules and intentions, but I ate well between times. The Elizabethan Room of the Kahler has regal draperies, a high ceiling and an elegant air; there, for $8.25, I had a complete dinner, with pike, indigenous to Minnesota, as flavorful and satisfying as any saltwater fish. At Michael's, considered by many the best dining room in the city, I enjoyed a meal for $8.25. And a $3.75 lunch was an event at The Depot House, a remade train station where a public address system advised in a near-whisper every five or six minutes, "All aboard for Boston"—or San Antonio or Chicago, as the spirit moved the pseudo train caller.

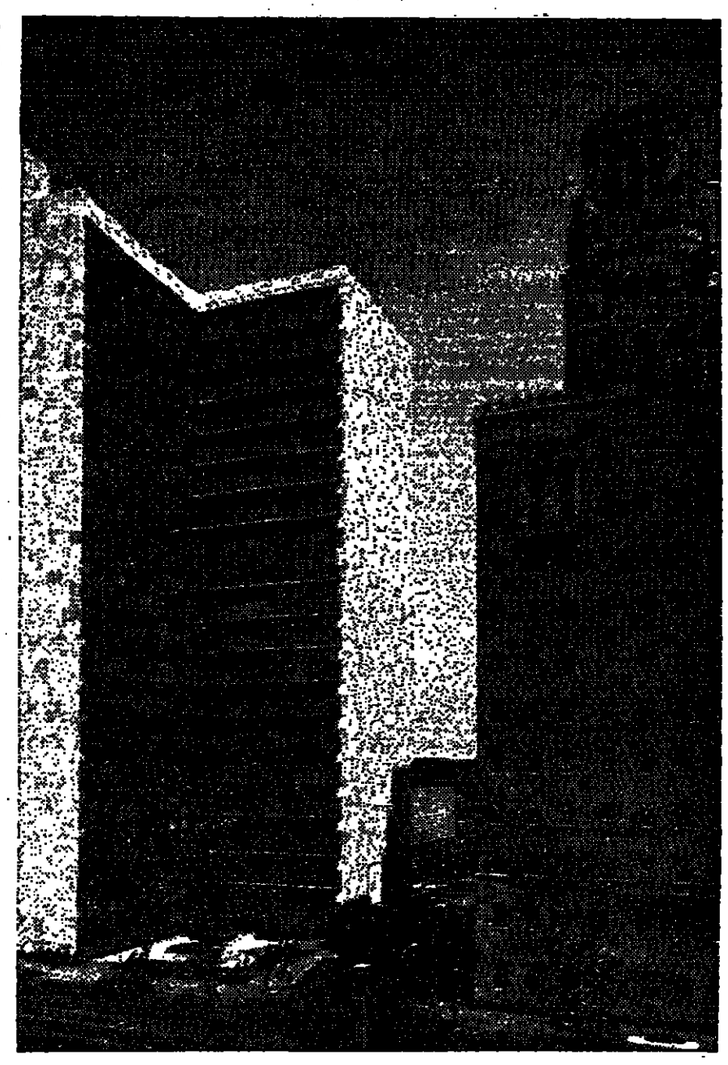
But that was to come later. Now I was intent upon getting to the 2 o'clock tour, and I made it. There were about 20 of us. We were ushered into a miniature theater auditorium where a 10-minute film was shown, describing the clinic in general terms. Of the nine buildings, the focal points are the Mayo Building and the Plummer Building, both 18 stories high.

The Mayo Building, we learned, houses the basic diagnostic sections for the non-hospitalized patients of the clinic; the Plummer Building includes laboratories, and resources for education and research. The Damon Building, with parking for clinic patients, has a medical museum on the street level. Other structures house training facilities and specialized units (for cancer, alcoholic rehabilitation, convalescent care, etc.).

We were told about the beginnings of the clinic. The tone was almost reverential—how Dr. William Mayo came to Rochester in 1863 . . . how his sons, "Dr. William and Dr. Charley," later joined him in practice . . . how "Dr. Charley said that the best thing he ever did for the clinic was bringing in Dr. Plummer." Dr. Harry S. Plummer is rarely mentioned in the leaflets and material describing the Clinic, but he is highly regarded nonetheless. A generalist, he stood high in the regard of the Mayo brothers; they named the first building of their complex-to-be after him when it was put up in 1914. Dr. Plummer had talents beyond medicine and the technological advances he created for diagnosis and treatment. When the new building was put up he told the telephone company his ideas on communicating between rooms—and what is said to be the first intercommunication system was born.

The tour took us through the underground tunnels to the lobbies of the major buildings, and we picked up an array of impressive statistics; e.g., there are 600 doctors on the clinic staff and some 3,700 other employees; Methodist and St. Mary's Hospitals have 1,600 beds and 33 operating rooms. But we received no backstage peeks, no looks at laboratories, nor did we visit the medical museum.

The tour did, however, conclude on a more personal note, in the offices of the brothers Mayo, sons of Dr. William. Here are arrayed the academic gowns which the brothers wore while receiving endless numbers of honorary degrees, the letters of thanks from satisfied (and famous) patients. The desks of the brothers were pointed out in hushed tones.



"The word 'clinic' conjures up a modest endeavor; the nine-building Mayo Clinic, in Rochester, Minn., with its $180-million physical plant, is anything but."

Back at 16 West I picked up my folder, filled with a sheaf of appointment slips. The computer had figured out when particular doctors would be available to see me, taking into account that some of the appointments would require fasting for specified periods. The sense of "mechanization," if you will—of an extraordinarily high level of computer-aided efficiency—was ever-present. But along with it came a great measure of personal courtesy and consideration from all of the dozens of doctors and technicians through whose hands I passed.

The most unpleasant experience of my stay in Rochester came on the third and last day of testing when I reported for my final consultation; the wait seemed interminable. Finally my doctor appeared and reported on the various tests: one blood component was a bit high, with some mild corrective medication indicated; the nostrils were somewhat dry, accounting for the occasional nosebleeds; "You should probably take off about five pounds."

Then came the heart examination reports. True, the irregularity was there, but it wasn't unusual or "something to change your life in any way." I should have an EKG every six months or so, get to a hospital if I have a dizzy spell and so on. I could go on playing tennis, with a degree of discretion.

It was all joyous music to my ears, and a fitting conclusion to my visit to Mayo Clinic and Rochester. I'd found the city pleasant, the clinic professional and possessed of a surprising degree of human warmth. And I was ready to leave.

If You Go . . .

. . . , to Rochester to visit the Mayo Clinic, you will find the list of hotels furnished by the clinic to be dependable.

The Mayo Medical Museum offers dioramas, models and exhibits telling how doctors cope with disease and injury, how the heart works, the structure of the human body and the like. There are plastic representations of the body's bones. The museum is open from 9 A.M. to 9 P.M. from Monday to Friday, to 5 on Saturday and from 1 to 5 on Sunday. Admission is free. The tours of the clinic, held at 10 A.M. and 2 P.M. from Monday to Friday, are also free.

At Silver Lake, a 10-minute walk from the clinic, are great flocks (sometimes 10,000 or more) of Canadian geese and mallard ducks, so accustomed to humans they feed from your hand. Within a mile of the city limits, rock collectors can see near-endless varieties of stone from all over the world at Rochester Lapidary Supply Company. Numerous antique shops are found both near the center and scattered about the city. Not far from the center is Mayowood, designated a Minnesota Historical Site, a 40-room mansion built in 1911, richly furnished by Dr. and Mrs. Charles Mayo with period furniture and antiques—now a possession of the Olmsted County Historical Society. Guided tours are by bus only, and reservations must be made by calling 507-282-9447. The price of $2 ($1 for children) includes the fare.—S.B.

A tale of two oceans. Eight seas. Seventy-five ports. And two French ships. M.S. Mermoz. And M.S. Azur.

It all adds up to the cruise of a lifetime. For you and for someone you love.

Because a Paquét cruise this Spring, Summer or Autumn is an invitation to beauty as well as mystery.

You can go to the top of Europe. Or you can get to the bottom of India. You can see Istanbul, Rhodes, Corfu, Haifa, Yalta, Malta, Varna, Athens, Alexandria, Bombay, Dubrovnik or the Fjords.

The choice is all yours among 14 Paquét cruises. And one of them is the pièce de résistance—our XIVth Music Festival at Sea.

This magnificent two-week cruise in August is a trip along the coasts of Italy and Greece with members of the English Chamber Orchestra and outstanding solists such as Maurice André, Maureen Forrester, Jean-Pierre Rampal and Mstislav Rostropovich.

Depending on which cruise you select, you'll leave from either Toulon or Calais. You'll have a vacation as brief as a week or two or as long as 40 days. And you'll truly leave the world in your wake —in the friendly atmosphere of M.S. Mermoz or the lively surroundings of M.S. Azur.

M.S. Mermoz and M.S. Azur are registered in France. They're also a little out of this world.

If you sail with M.S. Mermoz, you'll enjoy her warm outlook on life, from her spacious decks and her grand salon to her intimate discotheque her chic boutiques.

If you sail with M.S. you'll enjoy her distinct looks as well as her youth preference for active spo and informal buffets, the latest dances and the late night life.

And whichever ship y choose, you'll savor the mental cuisine and compl mentary wines of Paquét only cruise company in t world that rhymes with pâté and everything that très Français.

"I have one problem in the Philippines. There's too much to do."

by Jack Rolfs
Business Traveler

"Ahhhhh! Pagsanjan Falls."

"A couple of times a year, I have to hop-scotch around the Orient on business.

To be honest, I used to hate it, because I'd often find myself sitting around with just enough time to get restless between meetings and what have you.

Before my last trip, though, my travel agent mentioned these 36 different Philippine 'mini-tours' put together by Philippine Airlines. I said I wasn't going on a vacation, and he said it didn't matter—that since I was going to be in Manila anyway, I could pick out a tour ranging anywhere from three hours to five days, depending on my schedule.

Well, I was sure there was more to be said for Manila and the Philippines than my hotel room. So I signed up for the Pagsanjan Falls Tour.

Cost me 18 bucks.

And gave me ten hours of the best darn R&R I can remember.

Next trip, when I have a break and nothing to do, I'm going to see about the Fiesta Filipina Dinner. On the other hand, I may be able to fit in the Banaue Rice Terraces Tour. However, if I'm not able to do that, I might switch to the Morion Festival Tour in Marinduque. Of course, I've always wanted to...

Well, I guess you can see my problem."

(Fiesta Filipina Dinner: three hours; $6. Banaue Rice Terraces Tour: three days, two nights; $106.* Morion Festival Tour: four days, three nights; $100.*)

Announcing charter flights from TWA. That's right, TWA.

If your idea of charter flights has always been some fly-by-night operation, you're in for some good news.

TWA, who incidentally has been flying for some 50 years, is in the charter business.

With the same excellent crews and solid dependability you've become used to on our regular flights.

Only this time you'll be getting them at prices much, much lower.

Where will these low prices take you? To places you've always wanted to go. Like Athens, Las Vegas, Los Angeles, San Francisco.

There are Trans World Charter Vacations to a wide choice of destinations both here and abroad. And TWA or your Travel Agent can fill you in.

Charters vs. Scheduled flights.

Once on board, you'll find the biggest difference is in price.

Because the same dependable crews that fly our scheduled flights fly our charter flights.

The same good cooks cook the food. (Delicious!)

You'll enjoy beverages and perhaps take in a movie, for the usual standard charge.

And your plane will arrive and depart at the same convenient terminals as all TWA flights.

In most every city you're flying to, there'll be a TWA office to give you any assistance. TWA is the only U.S. scheduled airline with a major network of offices and airport facilities both here and abroad. And they don't disappear if there's any hitch in your plans.

How it works.

On Trans World Charters, TWA provides the plane and crew to a Charter Operator, who then takes care of all the details.

Even though TWA cannot make your reservations, because of government regulations, we'll be happy to give you charter information. So just call us. Or you can call your Travel Agent.

Reservations will be made through your Travel Agent or a Charter Operator. (And they're the ones who can tell you about pricing and cut-off dates for booking.)

After that, all there is to do is count your savings. And pack.

Trans World Charters. Now you don't have to be afraid to pay so little.

We give charters a good name.

Win a round-trip from New York to Ecuador on Ecuatoriana Airlines.

Yes. And Indian markets and casinos and the Amazon and the Galapagos Islands and...

Because in Ecuador, that land where the Northern and Southern Hemispheres collide, you can experience the best of every world you know, and some you don't!

Diversity best describes Ecuador and the things you can do there.

Browse through museums in colonial Quito. Bird watch on an Amazon safari. Swim along the many miles of deserted beach. It's all there, just waiting to be enjoyed.

Land at Quito in time to enjoy ceviche con tostados.

Now you can leave New York in the morning, and be in Ecuador the same day. No more inconvenient stopovers and odd-hour arrivals.

Just step on our direct flight, and step off in Ecuador.

And you can win a trip by entering this "Now From New York" contest.

It's simple. To enter, just ask your travel agent what day of the week Ecuatoriana flies direct to Ecuador. Write that day, plus your name and address on the coupon below, or any postcard, and mail by May 31, 1976, to: "Now From New York," 416 W. Marion St., Lancaster, Pa. 17603. No purchase necessary. Geographical area of contest: nationwide. Five winners will each receive a round-trip ticket, N.Y. - Ecuador - N.Y. (tickets paid for, and supplied by CETURIS, Quito, Ecuador.)

TRAVEL TRAVEL TRAVEL

United reveals the facts on charter vacations, and how you as an individual can take advantage of their low, low prices.

For years the facts on charter vacations have been hidden in the pages of special papers and magazines, and their money-saving benefits reserved for members of clubs and organizations only.

But now anybody can take advantage of super-low charter prices. And you don't have to be a member of anything.

So here are a few facts that will get you on the right road to charter flights.

Fact: United has more charter flights than any other airline flying to places like Las Vegas, Hawaii, California and Mexico. Fact is, we fly over 50% of all charter flights by scheduled airlines in the U.S. And they take off from the same gates as our regularly-scheduled flights.

Fact: Over 2,000 United flights have already been chartered for these destinations. So the chances are good there'll be a seat for you.

Fact: When you take a United charter, you get a flight you can depend on. So dependable that most pro baseball, basketball, and football teams choose our charters over all others.

Fact: You lean back and relax in a comfortable DC-8. And you get the same professional crews and friendly service as on our regularly-scheduled flights.

Fact: You travel with a group. Then you can be completely on your own when you reach your destination, or continue with the group, depending on the tour options you choose.

Fact: One low price gets you a flight and a nice room in a good hotel. Plus transportation and baggage handling between hotel and airport.

Fact: Charter vacations are very easy to get. Just check your local newspaper, or call your Travel Agent and ask about OTC charter vacations with United. Travel Agents have all the details on prices and cutoff dates, and can make reservations on charter flights.

Now that you've got the facts, call your Travel Agent right away. And we'll meet you in the friendly skies.

Introducing the Swiss Travel Invention.

Now you can have the security of a tour package without losing the flexibility of independent travel.

You want to do Europe all on your own. But you also don't want to have to worry about finding a hotel each night, especially when you change plans in mid-vacation. And most important you want to stay within your budget. For all of these "wants" Swissair has come up with The Swiss Travel Invention. An ingenious way for you to travel the way you've always wanted to travel.

Here's how it works. Before you leave home you purchase a book of vouchers either from a travel agent or Swissair. These vouchers are good for hotel rooms, meals and sightseeing. They can be used in over 500 Swiss hotels and restaurants. And in most cities and towns in Switzerland. And best of all, if you have any left over, you can turn them in when you come back.

THE SWISS TRAVEL INVENTION IS FOR HOTELS.

Since different people have different amounts of money they can spend on a vacation, you can buy vouchers in different denominations. For hotels there are 5 price ranges from $9 to $40. These double occupancy prices include a continental breakfast and, except for the lowest priced room, a private bath.

THE SWISS TRAVEL INVENTION IS FOR RESTAURANTS.

Now that we've taken care of your bed, we'll take care of your board. With three different priced vouchers ($9, $7 or $5) to cover your main meal of the day. These vouchers are good in participating restaurants all over Switzerland.

THE SWISS TRAVEL INVENTION IS FOR SIGHTSEEING.

Each sightseeing voucher costs $5. You can use them in various Swiss cities or towns to cover the cost of selected excursions or tours.

Now that you know what The Swiss Travel Invention is, you should realize how simple it makes your trip. First of all, you can compute the cost before you go. We'll even give you a list of rental car rates, and Swiss Holiday Rail Passes which will get you around Switzerland for some unbelievably low prices. (Like $40 for 8 days unlimited travel on all major Swiss railroads.) Second, you can change your plans along the way. You only make hotel reservations in advance for the first night. Then the concierge at your hotel must call ahead to reserve a room in the town you plan to be in the next day.

For details, call your TRAVEL AGENT or Swissair at (212) 995-4400. And find out how to get the newest invention in travel.

LEWIS & CLARK

...itor:
...ght the article on ...is & Clark High... ...avel Section, March ...ed the spirit of the ...quite well. We lived at Orofino, down the main Clearwater about 23 miles from Kamiah, for 11 years and still feel it is home to us all.

Mackey Brown said that Lewis and Clark hid their horses at the confluence of the Snake and Clearwater Rivers. In fact, the canoe camp was at Orofino (or rather at the mouth of the North Fork of the Clearwater, near what is now Orofino), and they left their horses with Chief Twisted Hair. When they returned in May, 1806, all their horses were returned in good shape. In addition, although the cache in which they had placed saddles had been exposed by high water, Twisted Hair had preserved all he could salvage. An Indian's dog had also dug up their ammunition; but his master had faithfully cared for the powder and shot and returned it to the party.

The Nez Perce are fine people, and it is too bad that old legends do not always tell the truth about them and other native Americans.

ASH LAWN

To the Editor:

Lois Gilman, in her article, "What's Doing in the Charlottesville Area" (Travel Section, April 4), failed to mention Ash Lawn, the home of James Monroe.

Ash Lawn, designed for Monroe by his mentor and dear friend, Thomas Jefferson, is only two miles beyond Monticello, and of great interest to the wandering tourist eager to lap up America's past.

Medieval cities romanticize it. El Greco skies dramatize it.

We've even re-economized it. Spain.

The Spain that inspired El Greco to paint and Cervantes to write still exists. And now, with the devaluation of the peseta, Spain is even more affordable than last year.

So come and be inspired. By fabled cities that have thrived since the time of the Greeks, the Romans and the Moors. By landscapes dotted with feudal castles and tile-roofed villages. And by the hospitable Spanish people themselves, who are eager to share their colorful history and folklore with you.

And just as impressive as what you see is the way that you see it. You can tour the countryside on horseback, if you wish. Spend the night in a parador—a grand palace, monastery or castle turned hotel. Dine long and sumptuously on regional dishes fit for an Isabella.

For more about the colors and flavors of Spain, see your travel agent. Or mail us the coupon.

It's one European vacation you can still afford.

Beautiful resort hotels—with a beach on the sparkling Aegean—are still from $10 a day. For two.

Dinner of freshly caught red snapper and wine at a waterfront café is still around $4.

In Greece, amazingly enough, your hard-earned dollar is still worth a dollar.

Ironically, you're getting the most fascinating country on earth in the bargain.

You'll romp on golden-sand beaches. Swim in the bluest water you've ever seen. Cruise to fabled Greek isles. Dance to the soulful music of the bouzouki.

And hear the echoes of 4000 years of history at every turn. Places like Delphi and Knossos and Olympia where the ancient legends seem to come alive.

There's no place on earth like Greece.

SOONER OR LATER YOU'LL BOOK AN AMSTERDAM VACATION.

SOONER, IT'S $342. LATER, IT'S $866.

Starting June, when trans-atlantic air fares are sky high, Overseas Charter-A-Flight, Inc. brings you new low prices on KLM Royal Dutch Airlines to Amsterdam. And more savings once you land.

In the air, we save you up to $524.00 off regular economy air fares. You don't have to join a club. Just buy your ticket well in advance, and plan to stay at least 14 days.

You fly on one of KLM's big, beautiful 747's, with a careful, punctual Dutch crew that makes Holland's reputation for hospitality a reality. (Your cabin attendants each speak at least four languages, including English.)

Once you land in Amsterdam, during tulip time or in the summer months, you can save even more on a wide selection of tours, hotels, Rhine cruises, and the generous Holland Summer Surprise discount touring package.

Amsterdam is the best possible introduction to Europe, close to all the great cities of the Continent.

With all the savings, you'll have extra cash left over to spend on the luxuries, concerts, an exotic Indonesian rijsttafel dinner, and gifts for the family.

Air-India announces its Spring/Summer/Fall Tours: 12 lovely vacations at extremely reasonable prices starting April 1. Here are just two of them.

See all of England: England Fly-and-Drive, 2 weeks $489. England's full of stately homes and haunted castles, village inns, marvelous food, great beer, history, beauty and romance. See it at your own pace. Air-India takes you there (and back), puts you up for your first two nights in a good London hotel (with bath), gives you an Avis car with unlimited mileage, a special route planning map, guest house accommodations in Sheffield for 11 days and a list of enticing extras. Of great restaurants, wonderful shops, cozy pubs, glittering theatre. Irresistible. Especially when we put you up in a good hotel (with private bath) for 13 nights, give you breakfast every morning, show you the city and give you a rather astounding list of extras.

The fares for these tours are GIT economy round-trip from New York per person based on two people sharing hotel and car. If 10-person group not attained, alternate date scheduled. Rates are higher on weekends and between June 1 and Aug. 31. All restrictions are covered in our brochure.

SRI LANKA SETS MARK

Last year a French tourist got a pleasant surprise when she stepped off a plane in Sri Lanka, the island country just off the tip of India that was formerly known as Ceylon. It seems she was the year's 100,000th visitor to Sri Lanka, and to celebrate the occasion the Tourist Board was giving her and her husband a free week. It was the first year in its history that Sri Lanka had topped the 100,000-tourist mark.

The 103,204 visitors the country registered in 1975 represents a 21.4 percent increase over 1974. Arrivals from North America increased by 24.7 percent. West Germany leads the countries that send the most tourists to Sri Lanka, followed by France, Britain and Japan.

Sri Lanka offers all visitors a 65 percent bonus on foreign currencies cashed in the country. This means that for every $100 cashed, Americans receive $165 worth of Sri Lanka rupees.

A single room in the luxury-class Hotel Inter-Continental in Colombo costs the equivalent of $15. Tourist-class accommodations in guest houses run as low as $3 a day with meals. A 150-mile round-trip between Colombo and Kandy on an air-conditioned train with lunch and sightseeing is $14. A car with an English-speaking driver-guide can be hired for 25 cents a mile. A lobster dinner can be had for $2.

If you want to be a torero without much risk, check in to the Hotel Inter-Continental Medellin in Medellin, Colombia. The hotel has built a miniature bull ring where the make-believe matadors among its guests can fight a bull. The bull, of course,

"Britain wasn't such a bargain
200 years ago.
So come home now–all is forgiven."

"Having been regarded as the 'heavies' in that entire affair of 1776, it would be very uncouth for the British to remain silent at this time. Rather, we would like you to come see us. We've quite mellowed, you know. We've prepared all manner of festivities for you. And we at British Airways have made our tours and fares particularly attractive, if I do say so myself. Of course, the recent exchange rate adjustments have added much to the bargains: your American dollar buys you more in Britain now than in years. More than even a few short months ago. So, read through our bargains for '76. And do give us another chance. As we have you."

Robert Morley

London Show Tour from $561

The original London Show Tour is still the best one around. For a two-week tour, you get an incredible amount: round-trip airfare from New York, 13 nights in a good London hotel (with private bath and continental breakfast each morning) and a number of extraordinary features. Not the least of which is 7 theatre tickets (or your choice of two other ticket plans). Plus, there's membership in private clubs and discounts at hundreds of shops and restaurants. And even an Avis car for two days (gas and mileage on you). Don't miss the American Museum at Bath.

Fly·Drive Holiday from $511

Here's where you can really let your independence come through for you. The main feature of this two-week tour is an Avis car for 13 days with unlimited mileage. Round-trip airfare from New York is also included in the price, as well as your first night's lodging in a very nice London Airport hotel. Once on wheels, you could trace your forefathers' forebears' footsteps. George Washington's ancestral home (Sulgrave Manor) is in Northamptonshire. Tom Paine's in Thetford. Daniel Boone's in Exeter. And William Penn spent some idle hours living in the Tower of London. (Sorry about that.)

Compute·A·Tour

If you prefer to create your own itinerary, this British Airways service is quite the bargain for you. It lets you "program" your entire holiday to suit your particular likes. You and your trusty Travel Agent work everything out together: your budget, your length of stay, where you want to go, how much you want to see. There are hundreds of hotels, side-trips, bus tours, rail connections and excursions to choose from. All about Britain. And you pick everything in advance. Even entertainment. Added to one of British Airways' bargain fares, Compute-A-Tour becomes especially economical.

Before you go anywhere, of course, it's best to consult a Travel Agent first. The bargains outlined herein are a mere sampling of what we have to offer. There are three-week tours as well, and all manner of fares to choose from. If you wish to go soon, there are one- and two-week programs available now. Prices quoted are in effect May 1 through May 31, 1976. They will be slightly higher afterward. Group Inclusive Tours are subject to a number of restrictions, including a $15 surcharge for weekend travel. So you must see our "Best Selling Holidays" brochure for full details. Call your Travel Agent or British Airways.

The Air France Way: A Paris week on a golden shoestring.

$415 includes 4-star hotel, airfare and more.

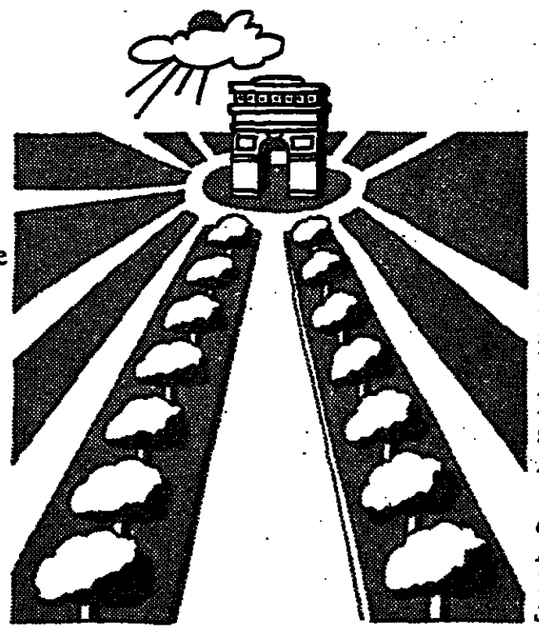
Announcing some happy news: now there's a week of Paris luxury at a price that's merely marvelously, fantastically and sensationally low—$415.*

Oh, what you get for $415!

First, glorious Paris. The boutiques. And the cuisine. And the museums. And the sidewalk cafes. And the Champs Elysées to promenade. And the Seine to muse over. And the Rive Gauche to enliven the spirit.

You'll stay at the Sofitel de Paris—a modern, 4-star hotel that boasts the latest in contemporary elegance. For instance, when you've "done the town," take a civilized breather back at the hotel. Swim or sunbathe at the rooftop pool. Work out in its gym. Or hit the sauna.

Every morning starts the luxuriant Paris way, with a truly continental breakfast of flaky croissants, café au lait and real, honest-to-goodness butter and jam. That's included.



And also included in this luxury holiday package is your roundtrip New York/Paris air fare aboard an Air France jet. And transfers between the airport and Sofitel. And all taxes and services. And your trip interruption and trip cancellation insurance. All of it for just $415!

For more information on living it up in Paris, for a little, speak to your Travel Agent. Or Air France at (212) 759-9550.

Price based on O.T.C. charter and double room occupancy. $3 Federal Airport Tax included. Tuesday departures: June 15 through September 7, 1976.*

The Education of All Children Act requires that from 1978, states and provide a "free, appropriate education" for ped children. It authorizes Federal financing at an el of 40 percent of the excess cost of educating students. Officials estimate that, although even are authorized, this will eventually begin pour- 1 billion a year of Federal funds into special

Greer, executive director il for Exceptional Children. "It is now a matter ts as citizens to the same sort of education as n. The new status of special education is really xpression of the civil rights movement of the nited States Office of Education estimates that there are 7.8 million handicapped children in this country between the ages of 3 and 21, one million of whom are not receiving any education and only half of whom are in adequate programs. At the other end of the spectrum, there are thought to be two million "gifted and talented" youngsters, fewer than 10 percent of whom are in special programs of any kind.

Until the 19th century there was no such thing as special education to serve such children. Gifted and mildly disabled children were handled like any others in regular classrooms. Those who were severely handicapped—if they survived—were kept at home and often not educated at all.

In 1817 Thomas Gallaudet opened a special school for deaf children in Hartford. This led to the formation of numerous such institutions—first for the deaf and blind, then for the retarded and those with emotional problems. The operative educational assumption was that such students were best served in "asylums" where they were segregated from the rest of society.

By the early 20th century, largely in response to the growth of compulsory education laws, school boards began to accept responsibility for the education of handicapped children. By 1911 more than 100 of the larger cities, including New York, had established special schools and special classes within public schools. Teachers' colleges began offering special training in the area. The whole field took on added importance when World War II sent large numbers of physically disabled but otherwise capable veterans into colleges and the job market.

Educators had been experimenting with placing some blind and mildly retarded children into regular classrooms as early as the 1920's. This idea of mainstreaming developed into a major trend beginning in the 1950's when Lloyd Dunn and other researchers began to question the academic effectiveness of "self-contained" classes for special students. New teaching techniques, such as the reward systems of behavior modification, also made it possible to move severely disabled children from institutions into regular schools.

As the schools were beginning to accept responsibility for educating those at the fringe of society and doing it in a "least restrictive environment," an important attitude change took place among those most passionately involved in the educating of handicapped children: their parents.

"In the past, parents of handicapped children often tended to be embarrassed at their situation," Edwin Martin Jr., director of the Bureau of Education for the Handicapped in the United States Office of Education, said. "They were grateful for whatever schools would do for their children. Beyond that they often made tremendous sacrifices, often devastating the rest of the family in order to provide for the needs of a handicapped child."

Then came the 1954 Supreme Court decision on school desegregation. That decision, and the active civil rights movement that followed, established the principles that quality education for every school-age child was not a privilege but a right, and that segregation of any kind worked against

A New Day for the Gifted

By GENE I. MAEROFF

The country's rising tide of concern with providing special education for the handicapped has begun to spill over onto another neglected group, the gifted.

Gifted students, whose intellect and talent are a major national resource from which future leadership in many fields can expect to be drawn, have traditionally received much more lip service than commitment. There persists in the public mind the attitude that singling out so fortunate a group for special attention amounts to fostering "élitism."

"A gifted child in the United States stands less than one chance in four of even being identified as gifted," Dr. Bruce O. Boston of the Council for Exceptional Children, said. "Of the country's 2.5 million gifted children, probably no more than one in 20 is being touched by some kind of program for the gifted, and that says nothing about the quality of the programs."

But Dr. Boston and other supporters of the gifted are heartened, despite the gloomy statistics, by what seems to be a sharp improvement during the last two or three years in public attitudes. The Federal government has set up an Office of the Gifted and Talented, sponsored a series of leadership training seminars on behalf of gifted education in 48 of the 50 states and budgeted $2.5 million for states and local school districts to use in gifted programs.

Nineteen state education departments have assigned full-time administrators of programs for the gifted and 23 other states have someone assigned to the task at least on a part-time basis. Most of this has happened in the last three years.

Finally, authorities on the gifted say that a new mood has been developing since 1971, following the completion of a two-volume report, "Education of the Gifted and Talented," by the United States Office of Education. "In this painstaking study," wrote Dr. Sidney P. Marland Jr., then the education commissioner, "the Office of Education has called on the best minds within our agency and in the field of special education. It has confirmed our impression of inadequate provisions for these stu-education" or simply the arts in education, treats the arts as part of everything that goes on in schools. The idea is that the arts and other subject matter can reinforce one another.

In New York City third-graders studying science at Community School 152 in the Bronx learn about the circulatory system through acting and movement. Dana Manno, an actress and choreographer working as an artist-in-residence, has taught children to "act out" parts of the body. Four students form themselves into a "living heart." With a child on drum acting as the pacemaker, student "drops of blood" are pushed through the heart as "valves" open and close. Other children form the lung, draped with streamers for arteries and veins and balloons for alveoli.

The same techniques have been used to teach third graders reading and language arts. Children have been cast in the roles of nouns, verbs or punctuation marks in dramatizing sentences. Miss Manno, who is one of 15 professional artists working in the city's schools this year, said: "All the senses are involved in this kind of learning. The kids get a 'feel' for knowledge. When they're finished, they have a very good notion of how the circulatory system—or English grammar—works."

At the Hillside elementary school in Hastings-on-Hudson, the study of math, science, geography and social studies has been enhanced by the visual arts. In fourth- and fifth-grade classes Richard Lorber, a painter and video artist, projects slides of images from nature—metallic crystals, cellular arrangements in plants, leaf veination, insect wings or a star nebula—with slides of paintings by Kandinsky, Pollock, Mondrian, Klee and other modern artists. Often the structures are so similar the children cannot tell the difference.

"I picked up on the idea that not only does art imitate life but art imitates nature," Mr. Lorber, who has been artist-in-residence in schools in Connecticut, New Jersey and New York, said. "You can start with very young children to foster understanding of complex visual structures. Later that understanding can be applied in many ways. The artist's job, like the scientist's or mathematician's, is to make the invisible visible. Children can learn to better use their brains through their eyes."

And ears. At Junior High School 52, in Manhattan, history, social studies and language arts are related to music. Eighth graders working on a theme of immigration in a social studies course listen to a variety of traditional and contemporary songs to heighten awareness of individual groups that have migrated to this country.

Students come alive to the sound of Sharon Freeman, a jazz pianist and singer, playing and singing ballads, gospel songs, and protest songs that add a human touch to past and current history. The lyrics of the songs are the genesis for student writings and dramatic readings. "Students should be participants, not just spectators," Miss Freeman said. "With music you can cut through the surface of many subjects."

Artists-in-schools programs now exist in every state. National organizations, such as the National Endowment for the Arts—which this year will send 1,750 visiting artists into more than 5,000 schools in all 50 states—the JDR 3d Fund, the United States Office of Education and CEMREL, the curriculum development laboratory in St. Louis, are investing funds and energies to develop new and effective roles for the arts in education. The American Council for the Arts in Education, a consortium of 25 arts education associations, is sponsoring a study on "The Arts, Education and Americans" aimed at providing the American public with a comprehensive view of arts education—its purposes, problems and prospects.

Many local school districts, with the help of local resources in the arts, are designing new ways to bring artists into daily contact with students. Several cities have developed interdisciplinary ical reason can there be l school to know an appli- t and weight, except per- d the poor student into Am I too short, too fat, re medical school students ize order? Or worse—are e same height?

Medical schools all demand an official transcript of grades from the undergraduate college (for which the applicant pays). Why then is it also necessary to fill out one or more pages of the application, listing every course ever taken, semester hours, grades, and cumulative grade point average?

Down at the bottom is the bold-type statement, "Your figures will be carefully checked against those from your college." Is this a not-so-subtle check of the student's honesty? Letters attesting his personal integrity (as required by one school) would serve the same purpose and cut applying time in half. If, on the other hand, this is meant to be a check of the official transcript, it doesn't say much for the medical school opinion of college registrars.

Even here, no two schools ask for the same thing the same way. One wants a straight list of all courses taken, hours, grades, grade point average. But another wants a breakdown of science and nonscience courses with cumulative grades in each. A third wants the grade point average by year (freshman, sophomore, junior), while still another asks only for the average within the sciences. If this is not confusing enough, what of the poor student whose college gives grades in plus and minus?

Medical schools also want an autobiography including aspirations, interests, medical philosophy, childhood dreams, activities, all in a space measuring roughly seven by eight inches. "Is this what my life boils down to?" asked one aplicant. "It sure makes you think —especially if you find you have two inches of space left over." One helpful adviser told an applicant, "For heaven's sake, don't say you want to help humanity. They all say that." So the student said he wanted to make a lot of money —to help humanity!

Some schools ask for the biography "in your own handwriting." This may forestall hiring some professional outfit to fill out the application, but it is just as logical to assume that if the biography is illegible, the student's in— they know he can write a prescription.

And what of the school that asks for a chronological listing of "everything you have done since the age of 14?" What interesting reading that should make on a dull afternoon in the admissions office.

Fortunately for the sanity of future medical generations, the American Medical College Application Service will send copies of a single application to any (or all) of 86 medical schools, at an average cost of $10 a school. Some schools may ask for an additional fee, but the service does cut down on the paper work.

Some medical schools will not accept an application unless it comes through AMCAS. But there are some that require their own applications. New York State, for example, has five schools listed with the application service, but another five have individual applications. Three of the state medical schools are on AMCAS—one is not.

Applications may be filed during the summer when students are assumed to have enough free time—that is unless they are holding full-time summer jobs or going to summer schools. The result is that most of those 30 days of September have to be spent answering questions, having pictures taken (2x2, 2x3, 2x4, depending on which school they are for), or obtaining recommendations, which can range from one to three of four.

Then if you are one of the lucky ones (Tall enough? Healthy enough? Succinct enough? Pretty enough?)) you'll get a personal interview on campus at your own expense.

But even this is no guarantee of acceptance. And if, after all, only rejections come in, there is little free time ahead. Students who take the route of the medical school abroad have to do it all over again sometimes in seven copies—and all in a foreign language.

Trudi Cowan, who is one of the parents who have undergone the trauma described above, is editor of Bellmore Life, a weekly Long Island newspaper.

Medical Schools— The Facts of Life

By ANN MINEHART

Every applicant knows how keen the competition is to gain a place in medical school. Our experience at the Graduate Studies Center in dealing with premedical students, as well as schools and officials, indicates that students can improve their chances by careful planning. Here are some typical questions that applicants ask the center and the kinds of advice that it offers:

What are my chances of being accepted by a medical school?

This past September 114 United States medical schools enrolled 15,295 first-year students, an increase of 532 over last year's class. Next year we can expect an increase in available spaces of 405. Women, blacks and Hispanic-Americans have better chances than ever to gain admission under new policies aimed at making up for past discrimination.

How does my age affect my chances?

American medical schools accept very few students over the age of 25. Of the accepted first-year students entering the 1975 class, 71 percent were 21-23 years old; 24.1 percent 24-27 years old; 3.9 percent, 28-31 years old, and 1 percent in the 32-37-year-old bracket.

To which schools and to how many schools should I apply?

Most students apply to at least 10 schools simultaneously. The best students may choose a school for its faculty or its reputation for research.

State schools give preference to local residents. However, states with fewer minority-group residents look favorably on out-of-state minority-group applicants.

Should I apply to foreign schools?

It may be wise in anticipation of rejection by all American schools to apply to some foreign schools as well, such as those in Guadalajara, Mexico, or Bologna, Italy. Although the academic is stressed more than the clinical in foreign schools, the requisite amount of clinical training may be obtained by either transferring to an American school in the third year, or through summer programs offered by American medical centers.

When an American student completes his studies abroad, he will be required to pass an examination mandatory for any foreign doctor wishing to practice in the United States.

What is the most effective approach in applying to medical school?

Just having high grades and good MCAT scores does not guarantee medical school admittance. A far larger proportion of applicants are in the high 3.2-3.5 grade average than was true only a few years ago, and competition is severe on both a quantitative and qualitative level. Assuming a pre-med student has high grades and good MCAT scores, acceptance can depend on how the student conducts his campaign—and it is a campaign.

What courses and major should I select in undergraduate school?

In selecting a major, the student may do well to consider that the emphasis on "the more science courses the better" tradition is changing. Many medical schools are beginning to feel a need to attract premedical students with interests that go beyond biological medicine. This is in line with the new emphasis on human relations in community health-care delivery. The student who has an interest in social sciences, but who wants to become a physician, may easily pursue courses in both areas.

Because many qualified applicants are rejected each year, it is important that the student be prepared to take an alternative route if necessary, or to work in a health-related field although not specifically in a medical capacity.

An application form that is used by a number of members of the Association of American Medical Colleges, is a helpful guide to what schools look for. Write to: AMCAS, 1776 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Suite 302, Washington, D.C. 20036.

How important is my grade-point average?

High grades are, of course, one of the primary factors considered by admission committees. However, many medical schools are placing an increasing emphasis on the well-rounded human being and taking into consideration the applicant's total personality and interests.

What kind of records should I keep?

Files that include copies of all academic transcripts, written reports, and names of instructors who should be reached later for a recommendation are useful.

A copy of each completed application including letters of recommendation, if possible, should be retained. Although loss of an application is unlikely, it has happened, and the applicant might be called upon to furnish another one on short notice. It is also a good idea to review the application before going to an interview.

What kind of financial aid is available?

In addition to loans and scholarships awarded by the schools, there are foundation grants and loans listed in "Medical School Admission Requirements" published annually by the Association of American Medical Colleges. Federal, state and military funds are also available. It is important to understand fully the conditions under which financial aid is granted, be it from private or public sources.

G.M. Turns Out Bumper Crop of Gradua

By STEVEN RATTNER

The New York Times

Students of the General Motors Institute at work in the school's heavy-equipment lab

FLINT, Mich.—At first glance the compact college campus tucked away in a residential corner of this automobile city could be a satellite of similar scenes in Cambridge, New Haven or any number of other cities.

Casually dressed students often shuttle between the imposing brick buildings enroute to classes, athletics chitecture enroute to classes, athletics or meals. Like their contemporaries at other liberal arts colleges, they spend their days enduring a diverse curriculum and their nights unwinding from it in austere dorm rooms and off-campus fraternity houses. And, of course, they complain.

But this is not Yale or Harvard or Stanford; this is General Motors Institute, the only accredited undergraduate college in the country owned and operated by a corporation.

While dozens of corporations—from the McDonald's Corporation's Hamburger University to the Xerox Corporation's $70 million center in Virginia—run training programs, only the General Motors Corporation college offers recognized bachelor's degrees — in three branches of engineering and in industrial administration.

Since 1919 when the college was founded, more than 10,000 unusually bright high school graduates have participated in the five-year, 48-week program that combines in equal proportions on-campus study and off-campus work in a G.M. branch office.

The students are levied a tuition of $800 a year, though they are in turn paid for their off-campus work. Students are not obliged to work for the company after graduation. About 69 percent do stay with G.M. for more than three years; many who leave go to other successful careers. The last two presidents of General Motors are graduates o fthe institute as are two of the Ford Motor Company's current vice presidents.

"This is a unique chance for a student to apply education, not just deal in theoretical concepts or abstracts," the institute's president, Harold P. Rodes, a Dartmouth graduate, said. "We're oriented towards industry in general and the G.M. Corporation in particular."

While General Motors Institute is the oldest and perhaps the most ambitious experiment in corporate involvement in liberal education, the idea is attracting an increasing number of companies.

For example, the Arthur D. Little Company, a leading consulting group, runs a management program geared towards administraters from developing countries who are involved with technology. Run entirely within the company, the nine month program awards accredited Master of Science degrees to 30 students a year.

Even more popular with corporations are in-house courses that range far beyond traditional training programs. At McGraw-Hill Inc., an employee (and occasionally an outsider) can study not only "Publication Design," but also "Approaches to Art History" and "English: The Classical Influence."

The proliferation of such courses, some of which lead to recognized degrees, combined with the rising quality of them, led the American Council on Education, in conjunction with the New York State Board of Regents, to begin the Project on Noncollegiate-Sponsored Instruction six months ago. The project monitors the quality of the instruction, attempting to persuade colleges and universities to grant credit for courses taught by companies, unions, government agencies and various associations.

At General Motors Institute the philosophy is not to augment traditional education but rather to supplant it in an innovative work-study curriculum. For six weeks, students spend up to five hours a day in classes, mostly required and weighted heavily in favor of basic sciences. Over the five years, a typical engineering student will take 44 courses, of which 20 will be in basic sciences, 13 in engineering and in humanities and social sciences.

He Makes Scientists Come Alive

By CINDY KADONAGA

BERKELEY, Calif.—Gregor Mendel, the German priest who developed the principle of heredity in 1865, was smoking a cigar as he waddled briskly into a packed auditorium at the University of California here.

The priest, in his long black gown and a borrowed crucifix, began to describe his experiments with red and white pea blossoms. He had to use vegetables, he told his audience, because "animal breeding was regarded as immoral by my superiors at the monastery—it appeared I was playing with sex." He added: "The bishop did not understand that plants also have sex."

"Mendel" is really Richard M. Eakin, a 65-year-old zoology professor who also numbers William Beaumont, Charles Darwin, William Harvey, Louis Pasteur and Hans Spemann in his repertoire.

In a recent interview, Dr. Eakin said that before he began his impersonations in 1971, "students either weren't coming or weren't paying attention. The impersonations have helped to maintain an element of excitement." But, he said, he did not plan to expand his repertoire because he did not want the impersonations to dominate his course.

Dr. Eakin writes his own scripts, based on scientists' journals and other writings, as well as on biographies of them. The Darwin script took two years to write, he said. Darwin continues to take up time. He said it took him three hours to make up for the part.

Dr. Eakin isn't always the only one to wear a costume to class. On one occasion, while playing the part of Darwin—who, in real life established the theory of evolution—the professor went into a lecture and saw an "ape" sitting in the front row. "The ape was obviously a student," Dr. Eakin said, "because he took notes on the lecture."

The Proper Study of Mankind...

By LEE DEMBART

The kind of controversy that surrounded new math in the 1960's is swirling again, this time in social studies, with battle lines drawn on some of the same public issues and many of the same private ones.

At issue is a fifth-grade curriculum called "Man: A Course of Study," which was developed and promoted with $7.4 million in Federal funds and is now in use in some 1,700 schools, including several in New York City. A number of schools, among them a few in New Jersey, have dropped the course.

The curriculum attempts to broaden students' thinking about the nature of man and society by introducing them to cross-cultural anthropology. Critics say that the course gives children a permissive view of strange practices in other societies and that by doing so it contributes to the breakdown of our own traditional values.

Work on "Man: A Course of Study" was begun in 1963 by the Education Development Center, a publicly supported, nonprofit corporation in Newton, Mass. The principal scholars involved were Jerome Bruner, Irven DeVore and Asen Balikci. By 1969, with Peter B. Dow as head of the program, the curriculum had been tested in the field, evaluated and revised. The following year, a private publisher, Curriculum Development Associates, joined with the development center to put out the materials for the course and teach teachers to use it.

In the first semester, the course focuses on the increasingly complex social organization of salmon, herring gulls and free-ranging baboons. In the second semester children study the society of the Netsilik Eskimos in Pelly Bay, Northwest Territories, Canada.

This is pretty heady stuff for 10-year-olds, but that's the least of the dispute. The critics charge that in studying the Eskimos, children are receiving positive teaching about killing the elderly and female infants; wife swapping and child marriage; communal living; witchcraft and the occult, and cannibalism.

As in the New Math dispute, detractors charge that a small group of scholars—an anthropologist, a biologist and an educator—with no knowledge of children had fashioned a curriculum far beyond the needs or abilities of the ordinary student. The supporters are charged with failing to answer successfully the question whether children who study the animals and Eskimos can actually make the leap to the broader issues they are supposed to be learning about.

The detractors, led by Representative John B. Conlan, Republican of Arizona, have raised this curriculum issue: Is the course the first step in a national, Federally sponsored social studies program that will remove educational decisions from local control? Mr. Conlan has written:

"Parents consider the National Science Foundation's aggressive role to induct teachers and school decision-makers into the university-based MACOS promotion and marketing network—to spread the MACOS 'gospel'—as an insidious attempt to take over education and the upbringing of their children."

Last year, the program came under attack in Congress during consideration of the budget request of the National Science Foundation. Representative Olin E. Teague, Democrat of Texas and chairman of the House Committee on Science and Technology, asked the General Accounting Office to examine the project.

In its report last October, the G.A.O. found that "the foundation has no guidelines for evaluating the effectiveness of educational products it supports or formal procedures for determining any adverse impact on human subjects using the materials."

In response to the substantive issue of the National Science Foundation's role, supporters say that Federal support was necessary to develop the curriculum because of the high costs of such an innovative program and the inability and unwillingness of private companies to undertake the risk.

Last December, the National Council for the Social Studies issued report on MACOS that stated that "no single national curriculum is either suitable or desirable" but praised both the scholarship that went into the course and its overall impact.

The council found that the course fostered "decision-making and other analytical skills, multicultural understandings, sensitivity to human relations, strengthening of human compassion and love for and appreciation of the family and its role as a personal and social institution."

Learning for Lollipops

By RICHARD FLASTE

In a North Brunswick, N.J., classroom, fourth-grade students are praised for good penmanship and ignored when their writing is sloppy.

In a Brooklyn public school, kindergarten pupils receive raisins if they show they can count backwards from 80.

Last year emotionally handicapped children in a Bronx school roamed the halls; now many of them apply themselves to schoolwork with an industriousness that would have been unimaginable before. The children are getting blue poker chips for remaining at their places for a 10-minute period, marked by the buzz of an ordinary kitchen timer. The chips buy candy, toys or basketball-playing time.

These are all examples of "behavior modification," a rapidly growing teaching approach that has aroused great optimism among educators—while also evoking fear and criticism.

Though it may not look very different from standard attempts to reward children for doing well, behavior modification does differ in its rigorous systematization and in an emphasis on "positive reinforcement" that often avoids totally reprimands and punishments.

Behavior modification is a term that was first used in the 1950's by the psychologist B. F. Skinner and others to describe their approach to dealing with psychotics. It was not heard in the schools until the early 60's and then primarily in education for the handicapped. As the use of behavior modification grew in the last decade, it expanded into the classrooms of normal children.

Commenting on the widespread use of behavior modification, Dr. Bertram S. Brown, director of the National Institute for Mental Health, said in a recent issue of Today's Education that "almost every public school near a large city or university has at least one behavior modification program."

And Dr. Wesley C. Becker, now a professor of special education at the University of Oregon, said that when he was in Illinois in the mid-60's and advocating behavior modification, "it was a dirty word in education."

"Since then," he said, "there isn't anyone in the field who isn't at least familiar with it; half are scared, the others are enthusiastic. There's nationwide training and a dozen good books."

In fact, it's beginning to look like a fad. The faddishness of it is the reason Dr. Steven Gordon, a psychologist at the Rutgers University community health center, began training teachers in the techniques. He said that he believed behavior modification was valuable in giving children "survival skills" that will free them to be "happier and more creative."

However, he sees "people jumping on the bandwagon who aren't well-trained" and are too ready to fall back on punitive measures.

A reason often cited for the growing enthusiasm is that the method is such an American approach—pragmatic, optimistic, based on the ability of anybody to change in response to his environment.

But opponents of behavior modification also often cite American culture—the humanistic strain that abhors anything manipulative. Despite behaviorists' assertions that they do care about individual differences between students, there are those who will see behavior modification as a threat to individualized approaches in education.

There is considerable confusion over what behavior modification is. Some choose to view it as anything that changes behavior—including drug therapy and psychosurgery—but that is not the framework intended by most learning theorists.

Behavior modification begins with a statement of goals—"behaviors" to be increased and those to be decreased—and a specific plan on how to reach those goals. The child must agree to the plan, at least implicitly, for it to work. Sometimes contracts are drawn to make the agreement explicit.

A behavior modifier has at his disposal a number of techniques. By far the most important is "positive reinforcement," which is popularly construed as a system of rewards that can include almost anything from food to free time. It can also include the poker chips at the Bronx school, part of what is called a "token economy." Ultimately, the positive reinforcement can evolve into something as subtle as a sense of satisfaction.

Behavior modification in schools is beginning to look like a fad.

One reason that reinforcement is coupled with the ignoring of undesirable acts is that behavior modifiers have found that paying attention to undesirable behavior often makes it occur more frequently. But ignoring something undesirable can make it go away, for lack of reinforcement.

Behavior modifiers do not necessarily shun harsh measures, such as corporal punishment or isolation from the group, but those measures are considered far less powerful than positive reinforcement, and many behaviorists see little reason for them.

One technique that can be harsh is "time out from reinforcement." That might mean nothing more than being told to sit in the corner while other children are achieving beautifully so they can get candy. But it can also mean placing a disruptive child in a room by himself.

In Butte, Mont., not long ago two teachers confined a retarded child to a "behavioral modification" box. The wooden box measured 4½ by 4½ by 3 feet. Its use generated a public outcry. There were expressions of shock from behavior modifiers who saw this as a cruel caricature of the technique.

"There are a lot of people out there ready to use behavior modification in idiotic ways," Dr. Becker said.

In addition to objections to what is seen as gross misuse of the method, there are subtler criticisms.

Dr. Herbert Kelman, Cabot Professor of Social Ethics at Harvard, said "it bothers me to some degree tha[t beha]vior modification does tend to [...] certain values in which you do [...] not for intrinsic reasons but for [...]sic reasons."

Dr. Perry London, professor [of psy]chology and psychiatry at the U[niversi]ty of Southern California, can [...] objection to manipulating child[ren to]ward goals that are agreed u[pon by] almost everybody—capabilities [in read]ing, writing and arithmetic—[...] he says, that is the intent of sc[hools]. # Meet Susan Alfano...

Susan Alfano is a senior at Manhattanville College. Instead of following traditional distribution requirements, students at Manhattanville define their own curriculum, assisted by faculty guidance. Susan chose to major in biology, with English and psychology as her other areas of academic strength. As part of her studies, she worked in the research laboratories at the Kennedy Center of the Albert Einstein School of Medicine.

"It was an experience I will never forget.. just being able to discuss their theories with the men who are finding the causes, and working on the cures, for Muscular Distrophy and Rubella was rewarding. I worked with the Node of Ranvier and myelin (defects in which are thought to be related to the major causes of many nervous disorders). Knowing that what I did helped with their work gave me a personal satisfaction which will not be equaled until I, too, can find the cure to one of the diseases afflicting the human race."

After graduation, Susan plans to enter the field of medical research. In this respect, she is like the other men and women in her class who will go on either to graduate school or directly into a career. (Altogether, for instance, 67 per cent of Manhattanville students applying to medical school in the last several years have been accepted—a statistic which ranks well above the national average.)

But Susan's education was highly personalized. She chose from among 21 areas of study those which best suited her interests and abilities. She assembled her own individual portfolio of academic achievement and personal accomplishment. With the special attention that only a private, liberal arts college can give, she emerged with a greater sense both of human values and of self.

Manhattanville College: an education for a career...and for a lifetime.

"Who's Who and Where in Women's Studies" was the first complete bibliography of courses (4,490 on 995 campuses) teachers (2,964) and women's studies programs (112, a third of them degree-granting). Now, the Clearinghouse has a list of 5,500 women's studies teachers and nearly 200 programs, including a dozen that offer M.A.'s and Ph.D.'s.

Advocates of women's studies find several reasons for this success. It has by now become widely accepted that traditional college courses do not deal adequately with the history, the lives, or the futures of the female part of the student population.

Most teachers and students in women's studies see it as a long-range method of changing the whole curriculum, from preschool through graduate education. As Linda Gordon, historian at the University of Massachusetts, has put it, women's studies is "an attempt to transform the contemporary study of human life and culture by rescuing it from the culture of male supremacy" and by working to "achieve a new equality, in which it is universally understood that humanity consists of two equal sexes."

Women's studies has, thus far, cost higher education very little money. Quite the opposite.

Until this year, most programs have had little or no budget. Teaching faculty are lent by traditional departments, and other essential courses are taught by "adjuncts" or as voluntary overloads.

Women's studies has not been without its problems. There have been questions about the direction of its scholarship. Mary Brown Parlee, of Boston University's School of Medicine, in a recent review of developments in psychology, judged the establishment of a field called the psychology of women as "basically misguided," since it suggested that all the rest of psychology was the "psychology of men."

Other problems arise because scholars are engaging in interdisciplinary teaching. Since tenure is still the purview of traditional disciplines, devoting half an academic's time to work in women's studies may lead to the interpretation that the teacher has reduced her commitment to a particular discipline. Thus, while women's studies can compensate students for a defective curriculum, it may also serve as an additional "revolving door" for women already hard-pressed to find jobs.

In Art, a Modern Trend to Old Ways

By GORDON F. SANDER

Michelangelo would have been proud. There in the middle of a studio in the School of Visual Arts in downtown New York stood a motionless young woman, arms akimbo. Around her 30 students, their easels pressed close together, were busy trying to transfer her image onto paper.

There is no way of measuring these things precisely, but it would appear that after an era of experimentation in art education there is a new interest in basic techniques among students, and a new emphasis on standards and required courses in the schools.

Ten or 15 years ago, the idea of technique, of "laying down a foundation," was anathema on many campuses. At Brooklyn College, that hotbed of abstract expressionism, it was impossible for a time for a student to work from the figure. The faculty, dominated by such self-confessed revolutionists as Ad Reinhardt, Mark Rothko and Clyfford Styll, simply wouldn't allow it. "Don't you know, my dear?" Mr. Reinhardt is known to have said to one student who was interested in figuration: "The figure is dead."

Morris Dorsky, chairman of Brooklyn's art department, said that today the atmosphere at the school is much less doctrinaire. Though there are still a sizable number of abstractionists on the staff, "no one today would think of forcing their program on the students the way they used to do in the 60's," he said. Moreover, if a student is interested in developing a figurative, or three-dimensional style, there are plenty of representational painters around—Philip Pearlstein is one—to help him do it.

At the School of Visual Arts, where 1,676 students are earning Bachelor of Arts degrees—500 of them in painting and sculpture—entering freshmen have always had to take some courses in anatomy and figure drawing, as they have at most institutions. Now, however, many of them are continuing to work from the figure until they graduate. To accommodate them the school has recently had to add three new sections in advanced figurative drawing and painting.

The same thing has been happening at other schools. At the Chicago Art Institute, where there are 500 painting and sculpture students, the resurgence of interest in the figure—both on a technical and philosophical plane—has been so great that the school, lacking enough live models to meet the demand, has had to press several old plaster casts into use.

What attracts students to the figure, at least on a technical level, is its visual complexity. Robert Beverly Hale, former curator of American painting at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and a member of the staff of the Art Students League, explains:

"The human figure is the most difficult thing there is to draw. Once you've mastered that you can master anything."

Every Monday night Mr. Hale, who has been teaching drawing for 30 years, lectures in the classical manner on a different part of the anatomy. The upper back is the hardest part to draw, he says, because of its intricate musculature.

The desire to get down to basics has also manifested itself in allied fields such as film, video, and print-making. "What we're seeing now is a return to the idea of technique," said Roger Gilmore, dean of the Chicago Art Institute, "Students want to have a grip on the medium they're using before they go off and experiment on their own."

Many colleges around the country, fearful of degenerating into rigid academies, have tried to maintain a balance in esthetic orientation. There are no more "house styles." At Boston's School of Visual Arts, which has always had a strong figurative orientation, many of the alumni have turned to nonrepresentational expression. This doesn't bother Edward Leary, the dean. Indeed, Mr. Leary said, he's all the more pleased when his graduates turn to nonobjectivism, because "they know the difference."

Mr. Dorsky, at Brooklyn, feels essentially the same way. "Even though the atmosphere surrounding art instruction may not be as exciting as it was in the 60's, when various avant-gardes were vying for attention," he said. "It's really much ... lists today are more inv... veying knowledge to the... ideology. There's more ... talk."

At the School of Vis... Rhodes, vice president ... affairs, said:

College Aid for the Middle Class

By MICHAEL C. JENSEN

Applicants in real financial need have an advantage when applying for many college scholarships. But that doesn't mean scholarships are limited to the poor. Millions of dollars in aid are available to middle- and upper-income families too—if the applicants have special abilities, interests or career objectives.

For students and parents with the time, inclination and wherewithal to conduct a personal search there are a number of resources—electronic as well as in print—at your disposal.

In an attempt to evaluate some of the available computer services and a number of the major handbooks, a sample seafch was conducted on behalf of a fictitious high school junior with high grades and a desire to major in liberal arts at an Ivy League college or its equivalent. The appropriate inquiries were made of the computers and a page-by-page examination was made of each of the written publications.

It soon became clear that while each source of information had its own special attraction, none was foolproof. Moreover, nothing can replace the personalized services of a skilled and interested secondary school guidance counselor who keeps up to date on financial aid. But with those caveats in mind, this is how some of the available resources rank in order of their usefulness for this particular search:

¶"The Student Aid Annual," Chronicle Guidance Publications, Moravia, N.Y., $7.50.

Of the written publications sampled this one seemed especially useful and a good value. Separated into undergraduate and graduate sections, it included a 67-page subject index. It contained detailed information about a host of scholarships and awards covering specific fields. A member of 4-H enrolled in a public-speaking program (or 37 other programs) could win one of 265 scholarships averaging more than $800, for example. A college junior or senior intending to pursue a career in real estate might be eligible for a $1,000 scholarship from the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers.

The annual also contained information on contests for scholarships. For example, a first prize of $3,000 was listed for a "Guideposts" writing competition.

¶"The College Blue Book—Scholarships, Fellowships, Grants and Loans," Macmillan Publishing Co., New York, $29.95.

The 506-page "Blue Book" contained information about a wide variety of undergraduate and graduate scholarships, organized in functional categories —listing available scholarships in the social sciences, for example, separately from those in communications. It also included a section on scholarships and fellowships for study overseas, listing particular areas like Japan or China.

¶Time Share Corporation, West Hartford, Conn.

This company does not deal directly with applicants but rather provides secondary schools with various computer services. These include matching a student's qualifications with over $750 million in scholarships available from private and Government groups. The system currently is being used in 1,280 schools. Cost per school averages $2,000 to $3,000, according to the company.

The Time Share computer contained a comprehensive selection of scholarship sources. Asked about only a single area of interest—in this instance "oratory, speeches and debates"—the service produced seven scholarships with awards running as high as $5,000. (Five of the seven however, were also mentioned in the written handbooks, primarily in the "Student Aid Annual.") ¶Scholarship Search, 1775 Broadway, New York.

This service feeds information about an applicant (e.g., religion, ethnic background extracurricular activities, parent's union affiliation) into a computer and produces a list of five or more possible sources of scholarship aid or you get your money back. Cost: $40. Scholarship Search produced 10 possible scholarship sources for the hypothetical student. Two were routine state and Federal programs, and three others were college-administrated programs at schools that had been specified in the application form. A sixth was Scholarship Search's own "sweepstakes" award of $500. Four bona fide, tailored-to-the-individual scholarships were located. Two of them were offered by corporate organizations, a third by B'nai B'rith, a fourth by a Missouri Greek letter foundation.

A Scholarship Search spokesman said such a modest finding would result in the applicant's money being refunded since fewer than five specially tailored scholarships were located. None of those four scholarships were listed in the major handbooks or catalogues studied.

¶"Guide to Financial Aid for Students and Parents," Simon and Schuster, New York, $4.95.

The 245-page guide, while lacking the kind of detailed information contained in the Chronicle Guidance publications and the "Blue Book," had considerable material on methods of evaluating a family's ability to pay college expenses.

¶"Barron's Handbook of American College Financial Aid," Barron's Educational Series, Woodbury, N.Y., $6.95.

The 508-page handbook consisted largely of material in tabular form from the nation's colleges. It a for example, whether various aid such as educational opp grants or guaranteed loan p were available at each school.

¶College Athletic Placement Ocean, N.J.

This company matches, athl academic records against the ments of more than 2,500 colle offer financial aid to athletes prepares a résumé that is fo to the athletic offices of as 20 colleges. Cost: $200. Becaus letic computer service was lo ized, specific scholarship inf was not requested.

Other sources of informatio scholarships are the colleges student is applying for at Government agencies in the where students live, and the Government.

At the state level, New Y 10 programs, including a basi assistance plan, a variety of scholarships, and student loa New York State Higher Educat ices Corp., in Albany runs the "arts teams" to assist in curriculum planning, teach classes and encourage teachers to develop esthetic values. Three such teams are presently working in 13 New York City schools, most in deprived neighborhoods. The teams consist of five artists—usually a dancer, musician, actor, poet and visual artist—who collaborate closely with teachers as colleagues, rather than just as visiting artists.

The concept of professional artists partnered with classroom teachers in all subjects has captured the imaginations of several universities. Next fall, three additional "arts teams" of graduates and undergraduate arts majors will enter the city's schools as part of New York University's School of Education contribution to the Arts in General Education project. They will not take the place of arts educators to teacher specific art skills such as painting or music. Rather, they will use their knowledge as artists to supplement the teaching of many subjects.

"The old approach of the arts as icing on the cake is disappearing," Tobias Sumner, principal of Bronx Community School 152, said. "The presence of artists in the classroom reinforces certain concepts. Everything we know about human nature—and in particular the nature of children—point to the centrality of expressiveness."

in the Greater New York

ough of it."
Jane, my less-than-perfect camp did not put an end to g days. It did help me to become a far more wary and sophisticated consumer. Because full-season campers spend nearly as many active hours at camp as they do all year long at school, choosing wisely takes on a new importance.

Money is no small consideration. Unless a child qualifies for a charity or agency camp, which charges little or nothing, a parent may have to spend between $15 and $25 a day for private camp.

Eight and a half million Americans will suit up for camp this summer, according to Armand Ball, executive vice-president of the American Camping Association. Like their adult counterparts, who have been vacationing at golf and tennis clinics, American mini-achievers are going off to camps that specialize in everything from scuba diving to French; wilderness survival to remedial reading; surfing to astronomy.

In the midst of all this plenty, how can parents help a youngster make a wise choice?

The first things to consider are the objectives of both parent and child. Is the primary goal to get excellent athletic training or to learn to spend time away from the family? Is it to explore a wide variety of activities or to focus attention on a well-loved sport? Is it to develop the so-called lifetime sports such as swimming, tennis, or golf or is it to prepare for the next vigorous season on a league or school team?

It is equally important to consider the camper. Is she a first-timer below the age of 12, or an experienced camper who knows her likes and dislikes? Does he need highly-structured days, or freedom from a rigid, year-round program? Is he independent, or does he need a fair amount of nurturing? How does she feel about competition? Is it invigorating or defeating?

Some sports camps hire professional coaches, athletic directors, or college players as instructors. Others boast big-name stars. It's important to determine whether or not the star actually spends time at the camp or has merely sold a name. Will the star be there when your child is there, and will your child be among those who receive his or her attention? Does being a star automatically makes someone a good instructor?

Can the camper endure the physical stress of anywhere from three to seven hours of strenuous play? For those who can, and who would like even more time at the sport they love, the question to ask is will they be getting the full time advertized. If an ice hockey camp promises five hours' daily ice time, does that include travel time to and from the arena? How much time does the camper get to play only in case there is overcrowding? Does ability have anything to do with playing time? If the camp is one of the highly competitive variety, will your less-than-star-calibre athlete spend a lot of time on the bench?

The two most important steps in choosing the right camp are meeting the director and talking to campers who have attended the camp, or their parents.

After evaluating the directors and speaking with their clients, try to see the camp. One wonderful director turned out to have the main road running right through his campus. Another never bothered to sweep out the rubbish that had been stacked in the center of each cabin ten months earlier. He assured me it would all be gone by opening day. In the middle of winter, another director showed me a sparkling kitchen and dining facilities for his campers. He told me he took his meals there. I believed him.

Accreditation is another good guideline, but is not absolute proof of excellence. Sometimes camps exceed an organization's standards, but choose not to join. At other times, members of various organizations let their standards slacken between inspections.

Up From the Basement: A Teacher's Story

By BARBARA AIELLO

In the 1960's I accepted my first teaching position, a special education class in a basement room next door to the furnace. Of the 15 "educable mentally retarded" children assigned to work with me, most were simply nonreaders from poor families. One child had been banished to my room because she posed a behavior problem to her fourth-grade teacher.

My class and I were assigned a recess spot on the opposite side of the play yard, far away from the "normal" children. I was the only teacher who did not have a lunch break. I was required to eat with my "retarded" children while other teachers were permitted to leave their students to the supervision of a parent cafeteria mother.

Yet, it was personally gratifying, not to mention ego-enhancing, to tell myself that despite the obvious isolation and discrimination against me and my children, I could help the kids nobody loved. I was successful, if even minimally, where other teachers failed. Although outwardly I cringed when friends and colleagues clichéd, "You must be so patient," inside I glowed.

Little more than a decade ago there was substantial personal capital to be made as a "deviant teaching deviants." Isolated from my colleagues, I closed my door and did my thing, oblivious to the larger educational circles in which I was immersed. Although it was the basement room, with all the negative perceptions that arrangement implies, I was secure in the knowledge that despite the ignominy of it all I did good things for children who were previously unloved and untaught.

For 50 years the special education community had created educational environments for "us" and for "them." Our practices of accepting basement rooms, reduced class size, and "combat pay" (in Pennsylvania, $200 extra for teaching handicapped kids) had communicated to the regular educational establishment that special teachers and their special education students were totally and irrevocably different from the norm.

Now, individualized planning for handicapped children in the "least restrictive" learning environment means that school people must comply with research findings that conclude the majority of mildly handicapped children learn best when they are included in classes with their normal peers. The least restrictive environment is often the regular class setting, and more and more handicapped children will spend part or all of their school day there, while support is provided to them and their regular class teachers. This source of support is often a resource teacher—the special educator of yesteryear performing a new function.

Resource teachers are recruited from special education ranks, so that the isolated teacher of ten "retarded" children in the basement classroom must now learn to function as a resource to her colleagues, as her handicapped charges are gradually integrated into regular classes.

When faced with this abrupt change in role, I decided to emerge from the basement and make myself as visible as possible to the other teachers in my school. This meant that I took my turn at watching primary kids slog through mud puddles as they climbed on and off the bus. I played "bouncer" in the cafeteria on a schedule as regular as that of the other teachers, and I decorated the oversized hall bulletin board—a bugaboo that fell to a different teacher each month.

I saw my new role as resource teacher primarily as one of opening lines of communication between myself and my colleagues. No longer would I spend an entire academic year attempting to remediate or cure 15 "retarded" children. Instead I would work with small groups of children on a short term basis with an eye toward teaching their teachers how to individualize instruction, manage behavior, and rejuvenate curriculum so that children labeled "special" or "handicapped" could continue their learning experiences in the least restrictive environment of a regular classroom.

During that first year I worked with 65 children in my "activity" resource room. I provided each classroom teacher with a written list of materials and methods which I knew would work with their children because I had tried them out in the activity room. In addition to the list, I wrote a plan [...] each teacher describing how the [...]rials and techniques could be used in the larger and more difficult [...] of the regular class.

For the first time in 50 years [...]novative, creative and exciting te[...] and learning strategies that spe[...] have done in isolated special se[...] can now be communicated, throu[...] "new" special teacher, to th[...] educational community.

this goal. The parents of handicapped children decided that such principles applied to them as well as to black families. Allied with special education specialists within the schools, they went to court themselves to challenge a system that in the social climate of the 1960's now seemed to smack of paternalism.

The landmark decision came in 1971 when in Pennsylvania Association for Retarded Children v. the Commonwealth, a United States district court ordered the state to provide education at public expense for all retarded children. The next year, in Mills v. Board of Education another Federal court extended this principle to all handicapped children in the District of Columbia, and ruled further that lack of funds on the part of the school system was no excuse for failure to comply. Since then, suits have been filed in at least 25 states, in some cases by parents of handicapped and gifted children acting together.

The ripple effects of these court decisions have been considerable. Approximately 48 states now have laws mandating special education for all or most groups of handicapped children and enforcement is growing.

In November 1973, responding to a class action suit on behalf of several brain-injured children in New York, State Education Commissioner Ewald B. Nyquist ordered all school districts to provide "adequate and appropriate" education for all handicapped children. Since then the state's appropriations have increased from $49 million to $243 million. On May 1 a new appeal process for parents in the state will go into effect. Similar developments are taking place in other states.

The most dramatic effects, however, have occurred at the Federal level. In 1966 the Federal Office of Education created the Bureau for the Handicapped. Since then Federal spending for research, teacher training and other activities has gone from $35 million to $350 million a year, and provisions have been made to include the handicapped in other Federal programs.

FINE AND APPLIED ARTS

Is it realistic to study art in today's economy?

At The School of Visual Arts we believe art is a growing field for successful careers. Film and Video Tape are widely used in industry, government and education. Graphics and illustration have also expanded as fields. Photography is necessary to all media. Even the Fine Arts have re-defined areas and are discovering new ways to bring personal statements to the public. But the study of art gives you more than a job. It provides a foundation for a special kind of life style, one that emphasizes self discovery, encourages flexibility and offers a base for a number of working directions.

Illustrators who become art directors are not rare. Film directors work in video tape as well. Photographers become cameramen. Our four year career oriented degree programs are designed with realistic goals, but never to the exclusion of the importance of individual talent and the careful way it deserves to be developed.

Bringing the Handicapped Into the Mainstream

By FRED M. HECHINGER

about 8:45 each morning, 15-year-old Jim maneuvers wheel chair out of a specially designed bus and the special homeroom at the Harry S. Truman School in the Bronx, where he will spend the period of the school day with other orthopedically capped young people.

9:40 a school aide helps Jim upstairs to a regular studies class where he joins his "normal" class-. At this point, according to educational terminol-e has been "mainstreamed." Several times through-ie day Jim will return to his homeroom for his r's help in making up for lapses in his note-taking d by his partial paralysis.

is typical of those handicapped children at Truman School who, according to Elaine David, the coor-r of special education there and at Truman's adja-lementary schools, spend about 75 percent of their n regular classes. In the view of many educators, ew approach amounts to an educational revolution beginning of the end of the dual school system for al" and handicapped children.

r the years the public and educators had tended eve that the best way to deal with handicapped n was to teach them in segregated facilities, from classes to special institutions. But in recent years proach has come under increasing attack. Isolating children, opponents argued, could aggravate their ps by giving them a sense of inferiority. Made e, these children could also be too readily ne-educationally as well as financially.

call for mainstreaming, which grew in the wake civil rights movement of the 1960's, came to the nd last November with the passing of the Educa-All Handicapped Children Act, which requires that te wanting Federal aid must provide "free and iate" education for the handicapped by 1980.

unanswered question, and the one subject to ng controversy, is what constitutes "appropriate" on. To what extent should it be separate and Or integrated and "mainstreamed?"

reports on mainstreaming romanticized early stories. Such accounts typically tell the inspiring of the little blind girl who is, for the first tegrated into the normal classroom and, through nation of dogged determination, high intelligence, ated teacher's loving care and understanding es, quickly overcomes all obstacles.

observers warn that such heartwarming illustra-more the wide variations of the children to rved and the difference between integrating one handicapped children and adding a substantial of youngsters with a diversity of problems to ary, already harrassed classroom teacher. Mass n tends to aggravate the problem faced only lly in small-scale projects. The difficulties are, r, multiplied in direct proportion to the often te preparation of the teachers asked to respond w situation and the equally inadequate facilities dinary school.

re other points to be kept in mind:

- handicaps are more receptive to mainstreaming ers. Many children with physical handicaps, blindness, deafness, or disabilities that impede ility, are endowed with high intellectual and nal qualities that enable them to overcome dicaps. Given some special help and, in some instances, modification of the classroom equipmen these youngsters can readily become an asset to th ordinary classroom.

¶Children with varying degrees of retardation pos substantially different problems. Some may benefit fro being integrated into nonintellectual activities, suc as sports, shop and other nonverbal subjects. Bu their sense of defeat and frustration might be heightene rather than diminished in intellectual competition wit their non-handicapped peers.

¶Children with serious emotional problems may no only disrupt ordinary educational procedures but als arouse anger and antagonism in their classmates. Here too, however, the degree of the emotional disturbanc should be seriously considered.

Most important, mainstreaming does not mean th end of special services. The Council for Exceptiona Children points out that the work of the general teacher must be augmented by consulting teachers, specialists visiting teachers and, most important, readily available "resource rooms" staffed with special teachers ready to teach handicapped children for varying periods. There are also times when an emotionally disturbed child becomes disruptive. There must be someone on call in the school trained to help at such times.

The council emphasizes that mainstreaming is not "wholesale return of all exceptional children from special classes to regular classes." It underscores that mainstreaming is not, as some who have embraced it appear to believe, less costly than serving children in special self-contained classrooms.

Teachers' unions and organizations are somewhat ambivalent about the new approach. But there are strong indications that future contracts will aim at protecting the substantial and still growing army of special teachers for the handicapped, while insisting that for every mainstreamed handicapped child the class size be reduced by three regular pupils.

Many objective observers agree that there are many sound considerations that recommend mainstreaming as a safeguard against simply using segregated special education as a means of getting large numbers of children, including many borderline or misdiagnosed youngsters, out of mind by getting them out of sight. But these essentially sympathetic commentators nevertheless express concern lest, in the way of so many American educational panaceas, mainstreaming will abolish special education classes altogether, not on the basis of sound pedagogical policy but in response to irresistible ideological pressure and in the belief that handicapped children will be readily accepted in regular classrooms.

The fact is that many students harbor strong prejudices against handicaps and disabilities, Dr. Gareth Ellingson, author of "Speaking of Children: Their Learning Abilities/Disabilities," warns. "They will have to be taught compassion for their fellow man. They must be taught that handicapped students are not prey, that they are in school to learn, to be interacted with, not be acted upon," he said.

Advocates of caution insist that they do not want to stop the beneficial trend toward returning as many handicapped youngsters as possible to regular classrooms for all or part of the time. What they do want to stop, or at least slow down, is the bandwagon of instant change and the confusion between civil rights and the right kind of education for every child.

On Being 17, Bright—and Unable to Read

By DAVID RAYMOND

I a substitute teacher picked ad aloud from the textbook. told her "No, thank you," unhinged, She thought I was art, and told me so. I kept that got her madder and He must have spent 10 min-to solve the problem, and got so red in the face she'd blow up. She told me e after class.

someone like me was a new that teacher. But she wasn't e. I've been through scenes all my life. You see, even n 17 and a junior in high can't read because I have 'm told I read "at a fourth-l," but from where I sit, reading. You can't know means unless you've been not easy to tell how it you can't read your home-nments or the newspaper in a restaurant or even your own friends.

ly began to suspect I was blems almost from the first ted school. My father says years in school were the s of his life. They weren't or me, either. As I look now, I can't find the words how bad it really was. I die. I'd come home from aming, "I'm dumb. I'm dumb 'ere dead!"

I couldn't read anything at ot even my own name—and ne I didn't talk as good as other kids. But what I remember about those days is that I couldn't throw a ball where it was supposed to go, I couldn't learn to swim, and I wouldn't learn to ride a bike, because no matter what anyone told me, I knew I'd fail.

Sometimes my teachers would try to be encouraging. When I couldn't read the words on the board they'd say, "Come on, David, you know that word." Only I didn't. And it was embarrassing. I just felt dumb. And dumb was how the kids treated me. They'd make fun of me every chance they got, asking me to spell "cat" or something like that. Even if I knew how to spell it, I wouldn't; they'd only give me another word. Anyway, it was awful, because more than anything I wanted friends. On my birthday when I blew out the candles I didn't wish I could learn to read; what I wished for was that the kids would like me.

With the bad reports coming from school, and with me moaning about wanting to die and how everybody hated me, my parents began looking for help. That's when the testing started. The school tested me, the child-guidance center tested me, private psychiatrists tested me. Everybody knew something was wrong—especially me.

It didn't help much when they stuck a fancy name onto it. I couldn't pronounce it then—I was only in second grade—and I was ashamed to talk about it. Now it rolls off my tongue, because I've been living with it for a lot of years—dyslexia.

All through elementary school it wasn't easy. I was always having to do things that were "different," things the other kids didn't have to do. I had to go to a child psychiatrist, for instance.

One summer my family forced me to go to a camp for children with reading problems. I hated the idea, but the camp turned out pretty good, and I had a good time. I met a lot of kids who couldn't read and somehow that helped. The director of the camp said I had a higher I.Q. than 90 percent of the population. I didn't believe him.

About the worst thing I had to do in fifth and sixth grade was go to a special education class in another school in our town. A bus picked me up, and I didn't like that at all. The bus also picked up emotionally disturbed kids, and retarded kids. It was like going to a school for the retarded. I always worried that someone I knew would see me on that bus. It was a relief to go to the regular junior high school.

Life began to change a little for me then, because I began to feel better about myself. I found the teachers cared; they had meetings about me and I worked harder for them for a while. I began to work on the potter's wheel, making vases and pots that the teachers said were pretty good. And I had a letter for being on the track team. I could always run pretty fast.

At high school the teachers are good and everyone is trying to help me. I've gotten honors some marking periods and I've won a letter on the cross country team. Next quarter I think the school might hold a show of my pottery. I've got some friends. But there are still some embarrassing times. For instance, every time there is writing in the class, I get up and go to the special education room. Kids ask me where I go all the time. Sometimes I say, "to Mars."

Homework is a real problem. During free periods in school I go into the special ed room and staff members read assignments to me. When I get home my mother reads to me. Sometimes she reads an assignment into a tape recorder, and then I go into my room and listen to it. If we have a novel or something like that to read, she reads it out loud to me. Then I sit down with her and we do the assignment. She'll write, while I talk my answers to her. Lately I've taken to dictating into a tape recorder, and then someone—my father, a private tutor or my mother—types up what I've dictated. Whatever homework I do takes someone else's time, too. That makes me feel bad.

We had a big meeting in school the other day—eight of us, four from the guidance department, my private tutor, my parents and me. The subject was me. I said I wanted to go to college, and they told me about colleges that have facilities and staff to handle people like me. That's nice to hear.

As for what happens after college, I don't know and I'm worried about that. How can I make a living if I can't read? Who will hire me? How will I fill out the application form? The only thing that gives me any courage is the fact that I've learned about well-known people who couldn't read or had other problems and still made it. Like Albert Einstein, who didn't talk until he was 4 and flunked math. Like Leonardo da Vinci, who everyone seems to think had dyslexia.

I've told this story because maybe some teacher will read it and go easy on a kid in the classroom who has what I've got. Or, maybe some parent will stop nagging his kid, and stop calling him lazy. Maybe he's not lazy or dumb. Maybe he just can't read and doesn't know what's wrong. Maybe he's scared, like I was.

For the Gifted, There Are Other Frustrations

The Cedar Rapids Gazette

"My teachers saw me as a behavior problem"

By NORMAN C. MURPHY

Most people assume that gifted children—because they are so obviously intelligent—can more or less take care of themselves in school. My own experiences as a child identified as gifted in the 1950's suggests that the very opposite is often true.

As a baby I was first labeled retarded. My 14-year-old mother, living in poverty in the mountains of Idaho, delivered me herself. I was malnourished. My mother, realizing she could not provide for me, decided on the advice of an elderly couple who had befriended her to allow me to be adopted by a young couple known to her friends.

The first indication that I might be above average in intellectual ability appeared when at three and a half years of age I began to read the school lessons of family friends. My ability to read and learn quickly created many problems for me in the lower grades.

My teachers saw me as a behavior problem, a child who always wanted to stay in the classroom and read. I was forced to go out to recess, where I usually stayed to myself or got into discussions with school staff members. The other children were constantly reminded of my difference, both by teachers and by my daily work in the classroom. While other students seemed to be interested in their textbooks, I was bored and getting into trouble by talking, not paying attention to classroom work or daydreaming.

From grades one through six, I went to 12 different schools in six states. In second grade, school authorities asked my parents to allow me to be moved into the next grade. But I had read an article in "Redbook" on advance placement. I took it to my parents and we decided since I was a bit small for my age and not doing too well with other children socially that it would not be in my best interest to make a grade change. The teacher then promoted me de facto by having me work with students in the upper grades of the two-room school and by asking me to help children my age with their studies. While this treatment was most flattering, I soon found it did not help me to get along with other students. It was not uncommon to be followed home with taunts of "teacher's pet, smarty, smarty, smarty, teacher's pet."

My parents and teachers were first told that I was a gifted child by the College of the Pacific child study clinic. Psychologists there said that I was capable of the most sophisticated university work and could use special class assignment to reduce my boredom and behavior problem.

One particular teacher at the Davis School in Stockton, Calif., was exceptional in her ability to help me develop without increasing the apparent distance between me and my classmates. I wrote articles for the school newspaper and plays for my classmates. I was then reading the Harvard Classics

Walking home from school one afternoon, I found a torn copy of Kafka's "The Penal Colony." When I began to discuss the bizarre story with a teacher, she told me no one would write a book like that; it must be a part of my active imagination. On another occasion while "listening" to Strauss waltzes in my mind, the teacher asked me what I was doing. When I told her, she told me that was impossible since I could not read music.

It was not uncommon for me to be taken out of the classroom for special testing. On one such occasion in sixth grade, I returned to the classroom just as the teacher was announcing to the class that they had a "genius" in their midst. If there had been questioning and wondering about me before, the teacher's lack of finesse created open dislike.

Grades seven through nine were spent mostly in a classroom combining all three grades. I was assigned the task of cataloging the school library, by a teacher desperate to keep me busy. While it was interesting, it did not necessarily augment my learning.

These experiences were pretty well universal in the public schools I attended. Had my parents not made a big financial sacrifice to place me in fine preparatory schools run by the Lutheran Church Missouri Synod, it is doubtful I could have received the educational background and study habits necessary for college.

In fact, had I stayed with my natural mother, I doubt very much that I would have received much more than a high-school diploma. If the problems of the middle-class gifted child are difficult, the problems of the poor but gifted child—particulary in remote rural areas—must be exceptionally frustrating. In some cases educators must be treating them with a carelessness that borders on criminal neglect.

Like the handicapped, the gifted need special programs if they are to benefit fully from their schooling. Some added costs are a factor in mounting such efforts, but merely getting educators, legislators and other public officials to acknowledge this need—much less to provide the personnel and funds—has been a problem.

There is the threat, for example, that a portion of the tiny gain may be wiped out if the Federal government follows President Ford's budget proposal and cuts back the allotment for gifted programs to $1.2 million. Moreover, a source of continuing irritation to those working in the gifted field is the symbolism of the government's insistence on housing the gifted office in the Bureau for the Education of the Handicapped.

Sympathy for the gifted is often in short supply. There is a widespread attitude that such children, because of their natural blessings, already have an advantage over their classmates and ought to be able to make it on their own. Special programs for the gifted are thus sometimes regarded by critics as "élitism."

"Using the élitism issue is a good way for less than committed school administrators to wriggle off the hook and not do anything for the gifted," Dr. Joseph S. Renzulli, director of the "Teaching the Talented Program" at the University of Connecticut, charges.

Dr. Renzulli, is a former president of The Association for the Gifted, believes with most others in the field that without extra attention youngsters may never realize the full potential of their giftedness. They maintain that lack of proper cultivation can even cause giftedness to wilt away like an unwatered flower.

Programs to aid the gifted vary, but what they have in common is an attempt to stimulate creativity, allow in-depth exploration of a subject and encourage progress according to interest and ability, not age. An entire class may be comprised only of gifted students and occasionally the approach includes a whole school such as New York City's Bronx High School of Science or Fiorello H. LaGuardia High School of Music and the Arts.

More often, though, programs for the gifted tend to involve taking them out of their regular classes and bringing them together with other gifted students for only a small portion of the

may be limited to an after-sc
Saturday program.

An outstanding example of a S

Erik Kloss, the great saxophonist, was born blind. His father became the director of the School for Blind Children in Pittsburgh. Erik has enriched my life and he tells me that I have added a lot, through our mutual work, to his.

Both Erik and Chrissy evoke positive feelings in others. They give you the sense that they feel comfortable about who they are as people, so that gives you a much greater chance to feel comfortable with them.

I believe that their parents and others who have been close to them during their early years of life were able to mention and manage the sad and angry feelings which are part of such a time. They somehow communicated to their children that it was all right to feel—many different ways—and that together they would all grow into the job of being persons who could make things happen and could deal with things in their own ways.

There seems to be a quality about human beings which makes us long to feel that we have something of value to offer the world. When we do something or make something, we'd like it to be as worthwhile as possible. So, it's natural that our hopes and expectations are very high when we look forward to the birth of our own children. We want to make the most perfect babies possible. In fact, every prospective parent wonders just how perfect his or her baby is going to be. Parents always have. We want to create a future generation that's somehow better than our own.

Imagine the disappointment, the real sadness, that comes to the parents whose child is born with an obvious physical or mental handicap. Right from the beginning of the relationship with their child, so many natural longings are frustrated.

It seems to me that the greatest need right then—the thing that can best help that family in the years ahead—is a chance to grieve. The greatest gift those parents and grandparents of a baby born with a handicap (or stricken with one later in life) is a community of friends who can recognize the pain and allow the grief to be said in many ways.

I believe that all feelings are mentionable and also manageable. If a child with a handicap is fortunate enough to grow up in a family that has allowed itself to grieve about that handicap, that child has supporters who have already mobilized their empathy for all subsequent grief that that child will experience about his or her own handicap.

Recognizing and dealing with their own feelings about their child, parents have the opportunity of becoming truly loving of their whole child. And, of course, love between the parents and their child is the root from which the capacity for enjoying and caring about others grows.

A child is a child whether or not he or she has an obvious handicap. Feelings of rage, love, disappointment and joy are part of us all. I believe that a major goal in relating to all children is to insure them the full heritage of the richness of human feeling. We can offer that by first allowing it to ourselves.

You'll notice that I most often refer to handicaps as "obvious handicaps." My reason for this is my belief that we are all handicapped in one way or another. No one's life is perfect. Some of the most hidden handicaps are the toughest to overcome; therefore, we all have the potential for empathy with others who have obvious physical or mental handicaps.

It all begins by accepting ourselves and caring for ourselves exactly as we are.

The objective seems laudable enough —to identify as early as possible in a child's life potential impediments to learning that might block educational progress. But the screening process by which this goal is to be achieved remains vague, uncertain and controversial.

Screening is being utilized by a growing number, though still a minority, of the country's 16,000 school districts, and the levels of sophistication in its use are enormous. Moreover, screening is not an end in itself. Improperly employed, it can lead consequences.

s, screening advocates, in- Hill, believe that the ad- weigh the disadvantages. Levinson, a Queens psy- been involved in the devel- screening test for identify- dyslexia, a reading im- pairment that he says is found in 10 percent of all youngsters.

The test, which is being used in several school districts in Queens and on Long Island, is done by projecting a sequence of pictures on a screen at a blurring speed and seeing how much the speed has to be reduced before the child recognizes the picture.

"Our accuracy in finding dysmetric dyslexia is very high," says Dr. Levinson, "but most screening techniques that predict reading disorders do not tell which of 1,000 reasons might be responsible."

Screening methods are still undergoing experimentation and one of the major forces behind the movement is the Federal Government. Washington's contributions to screening have been mainly through the Head Start program for economically disadvantaged youngsters and the Early and Periodic Screening, Diagnosis and Treatment Program aimed at millions of children eligible for Medicaid.

Screening children well before the age at which they will enter kindergarten or first grade is seen as a way of nipping potential difficulties in the bud. But some authorities have reservations here, too.

"Tests tend to be less predictive when children are young and I'm concerned about the possible harm," Dr. Virginia C. Shipman, a researcher with the Educational Testing Service, said:

Some educators are awakening to the possibility that parents may have a great deal to add to the screening process. As part of their effort to produce developmental profiles on their incoming pupils, some schools are now interviewing parents. In some instances, parents are asked to observe children at home and keep checklists on their behavior.

Screening could be a boon to individualization and could lead to more rewarding schooling for many pupils. Some supporters assert that screening could be a key to heading off juvenile delinquency and reducing dropouts among young people whose needs were not met under previous educational approaches.

There is no question that schools are not working for many children, and that education could be improved by taking greater cognizance of individual differences.

"A good portion of the gifted are not being served, and you can safely estimate that we are giving even less support to those who may be more difficult to identify," said Dr. Ted Grenda of the New York State Education Department.

One major national problem, according to Dr. Harold C. Lyon, director of the Federal Office of Education for the Gifted and Talented, is that "there is a false notion that the gifted are found only in the upper elitist groups."

At St. Ann's, Stanley A. Bosworth, the headmaster, said that "there are unfold numbers out there who score very high on [standard] tests and even then are not being adequately educated. If there are hundreds of kids like this, then there should be scores of schools like this."

Parents of black and Hispanic schoolchildren here have long complained that their children were too frequently misassigned to slower programs, while special programs at some schools seem to include mostly white students, although the school population of the city is 36.6 percent black and 27.7 percent Hispanic.

This was part of the reason why the city abolished in 1973 the "tracking" system, whereby pupils designated high achievers by teachers and guidance counselors would be assigned to the "academic track."

When St. Ann's opened in 1965, Mr. Bosworth got minority students by going directly to youth centers in Bedford-Stuyvesant and schools in Brownsville.

"We have proven the existence of a large pool of testably gifted minority pupils," he says, decrying "liberal piety" which he says presumes these students will not pass regular tests.

Today, word of mouth is sufficient in maintaining a constant flow of minority applicants, many of whom have to be turned away for lack of space or money. Tuition at St. Ann's ranges from $2,600 to $3,150 a year. About 27 percent of St. Ann's pupils are on scholarships. Thirty-eight percent of all scholarship funds go to minority students.

There are few comparable public schools in New York City. Mark Twain Junior High School for the Gifted and Talented in Coney Island opened last year. It has 560 students in the seventh grade and because of a court order maintains a ratio of 70 white students to 30 blacks and Hispanics. There are already 920 applications for the coming year. Reading and math tests are used to determine eligibilty. The city also has renowned academic high schools such as the Bronx High School of Science, Stuyvesant and Brooklyn Technical High School, for which special tests are required.

Only the Hunter College Elementary School, however seems to stand out for its long commitment to educating the gifted, which includes special efforts to attract minority pupils at an early age.

Between 35 and 40 percent of Hunter's 382 pupils are black and Hispanic. Stanley Seidman, the principal, says that many were found in day-care centers throughout the city.

Early detection of gifted minority children is the problem most preoccupying other educators. The New York State Board of Regents issued a statement on the gifted in January that urged school districts to develop new ways of identifying minority gifted, noting that many may not be primarily English-speaking.

Life With a Retarded Child: The Will to Prevail

By ANN and RUD TURNBULL

CHAPEL HILL, N. C.—Our 9-year-old son, Jay, is severely retarded. That simple fact has significant consequences for all of us. There is nothing the parents of a handicapped child can take for granted—including whether the schools will be providing programs for your child from year to year.

Jay can walk and talk now, but once it was doubtful if he could ever do either. He went away to school out of state when he was only 3½ years old—he couldn't even walk, only cry in sheer desperation as we overcame our instincts and left him in the arms of a young stranger, saying, "He's yours, now. Take care of him."

She did. Katie taught him to stand, walk, and start talking. For the school's Christmas play, she had him play baby Jesus because his blond curls resembled a halo.

Now he's home with us and we realize even more fully how dramatically he affects us. His impact on our emotions is immense. It began a long time ago. When we asked why Jay was "slow" when he was an infant, the doctors—all but one—answered, "It's better for you not to know." Only one doctor told us he had hydrocephalus, and that there was little he could tell us about what the future would hold.

Many years later, at a Dunkin' Donuts shop, a stranger cried out: "What's wrong with that little boy — he's strange." In a hospital, a therapist said, "My God, he's got the biggest head I've ever seen." At lacrosse games, people stare at him because of the way he walks. We have a variety of reactions. It is hard not to be angry, and sometimes we are. It sometimes takes courage to take Jay with us into the community, knowing what may happen. We ask ourselves, "Why don't all these people see his charms and beauty instead of his differences?"

Jay's impact is more than emotional. It complicates our lives, it fatigues us, it makes almost daily demands on us. We choose our neighborhood with Jay's acceptance in mind. When thinking recently of moving into another house, we gave first consideration to a neighborhood in which some of Jay's handicapped friends live. But we stayed put because Jay is now fairly well accepted in our part of town. Two young neighbors vouch for Jay in the community. When they walk around the block with us their presence makes us less an object of curiosity.

Most of our closest friends are those with handicapped children. Others have a hard time sharing our experiences, and we theirs. Parents tell us about their children's abilities to read at the fifth grade level in second grade: they do not understand that we are eager for Jay to be able to read just his last name, and that it was a cause of great joy when he could spell "J-A-Y."

We are careful in selecting Jay's dentist, since we cannot reasonably expect just any dentist to treat him. We scoured the faculty and staff of the dental school until we found one who had trained with handicapped children. His first step was to spend several hours getting Jay not to be afraid of the dentist's chair.

We interviewed the local baby sitters to find some who were not uncomfortable when Jay was in the room. We had to explain his habits and needs, almost apologize for him in order to get sitters. Some declined the job. A few tried and had difficulty. A few others were successful beyond our wildest dreams.

Because Jay is handicapped, we cannot make the same assumptions that parents of nonhandicapped children can. We have had to fight for a school program. When there wasn't one we searched high and low from Massachusetts to South Carolina to find an institution for Jay. One we chose in Massachusetts cost $8,500 a year. Not everyone can afford that price, even with the state tuition subsidies, which are usually paltry. There are few guidebooks to those schools, and they are often out of date. Our telephone bills amounted to more than $100 monthly for several months; that was only part of the cost of the search.

In his nine years, Jay has been in three schools. From 3½ to 4½ years of age he went to the Crystal Springs Nursery School in Assonet, Mass. At 4½ he moved to the Pine Harbor School in Pascoag, R. I., where he remained until he was 7. Now at home, he is in a public school, Lincoln School in Chapel Hill.

Hardly a week goes by when we are not involved in several nightly meetings to get schools, group homes, sheltered workshops, summer camps or religious education for Jay and others like him. When we get to talk to the school board about classes for handicapped children, we are last on their agenda. At 11:30 P.M., they finally give us 10 minutes to speak. We tell them about Jay in the institution and the cost. And we can say no more—the memories of his absence are too painful. We cry. The school board members are speechless. They say a weak "thank you," and they adjourn. No decisions made.

Most parents can assume that the day will come when their children will no longer depend on them. We can never make that assumption. State laws require us to support our handicapped children throughout adulthood, and simple morality dictates we do so. We will do so eagerly, but we must plan now for the future.

Jay will need lifelong protection and services—a group home and sheltered workshop will be his home and job. We helped plan and get under way a day care center for handicapped preschoolers. We helped organize a sheltered workshop, and the best letter we get each month is the newsletter written and produced by the employees there.

But there is more to life with Jay than the fight for services and their rewards. We remember what Faulkner said, and we try to do more than survive; we try to prevail. We can and do, because we have each other, and Jay's love ornaments and strengthens our own. We go with what we have—a beautiful blond boy who engulfs us and our friends with love. We take heart from the unflagging efforts of our friends who, as professionals or parents, work side by side with us for Jay and love him as we do. We rise to the many daily challenges of Jay's social ostracism — he says, "Go, Tar Heels!" when he meets a stranger in Chapel Hill. And we maintain our sense of humor—Jay's bopping down this small town's main street with his friend Beth, one of our students after pizza and ... the source of great humc... to all who know him. ... as a person, not a type ... greatest survival skill.

One day a few weeks ... in our backyard with our ... bors and Jay. We saw ... with Jay on the swings, ar... them for being Jay's fri... plied, quite simply, "W... deal? He's neat."

Children First—or La...

By EDWARD ZIGLER

Point of View

The single greatest impediment to our improving the lives of America's children is the myth that we are a child-oriented society.

In our nation today children and families all too often come last, and the social barriers to providing a better quality of life for our nation's children have become almost insurmountable. Too many Americans either will not or do not want to hear the well-documented facts concerning our nation's massive shortcomings in regard to children.

A full accounting of the long, sad litany of our national failure to children is contained in the report of the 1970 White House Conference on Children. This document, prepared by 2,000 concerned lay people and professionals, is essentially a 400-page indictment of what we are not doing at all or doing badly for our nation's children. I will only note a brief sampling from our record of indifference, neglect, and abuse of America's children, a group we ironically point to with pride as our nation's most important natural resource.

Few too many Americans are aware or concerned that the health care of children and pregnant mothers constitutes a national disgrace.

In Amerca today there are not only thousands of pregnant women receiving inadequate prenatal care, but also many who have never been apprised of the importance of health care during this most critical period in the developmental cycle. The resultant here is well known and amounts to nothing less than sentencing many American children in utero to infant death or a variety of physical and psychological handicaps that no amount of postnatal intervention can ever completely remediate.

The problem of poor health care of our nation's children is not confined to America's impoverished groups. A distinguished pediatrician has estimated that two-thirds of our nation's 60 million children receive inadequate medical attention, with 25 million of these children receiving little more than marginal care. The problem here as in other health areas is not lack of knowledge but rather a shortage of commitment and concern.

The story on the nutrition front is equally poor. A nation that has put men on the moon still puts many of its children to bed hungry at night. A significant portion of America's economically disadvantaged children suffer permanent setbacks in physical growth or frequent illnesses as a result of inadequate nutrition. An unfortunate sight in many American schools is the child who in hunger-induced apathy is sleeping at his desk. There is no educational panacea that can help hungry children to learn.

Some years after Silberman's "Crisis in the Classroom," too many of America's schools remain joyless enclaves in which too many children experience little more than rebuff and failure. Thanks to the recent fine detective work of the Children's Defense Fund, we have been made aware of a heretofore underemphasized fact of school life. Despite our compulsory school attendance laws, a surprisingly high percentage of America's children do not even attend school. In discussing this problem—not of school dropouts but school pushouts—The Carnegie Quarterly commented, "The situation, to be sure, differs dramatically from school to school, but it is dis... you look, North or South... try, big district or small."

But the difficulties of the emotionally disturbed child stem from disturbances in his feelings, his attitudes, his ideas of his own worth, his motivations, his aspirations. His energies are so tied up in maintaining inner stability that he has little left over to devote to education.

The learning-disabled child may have some of these same disordered feelings. But in his case, they are a result of his inability to learn and to function well. He may develop true emotional disorders. But they are secondary to his basic problem. Boys and girls in low-income and rural areas, where competent diagnosticians are relatively few and overburdened, are most likely to be incorrectly diagnosed as having any of a variety of problems, chiefly mental retardation and emotional disturbance.

On the other hand, a large number of those who work with children today, not competent in the detection of and remedy for learning-disabled boys and girls because of inadequate training and understanding, label too many children learning-disabled, using the term for students whom the school has been unable to teach successfully for a variety of reasons. This mishandling has led to a backlash of sorts in the last two or three years. Some critics say that learning disabilities do not exist; that this is a "wastebasket" term for any child who has difficulty achieving. This kind of treatment, writes Diane Divoky, an editor of Learning magazine, "only mask(s) the very real problems of (other) children who are difficult and disappointing."

¶Parental anxieties. It is not uncommon in middle- or upper-class areas for some parents of children who are not doing well in school to pressure schools into designating their children as learning-disabled. Some parents of children with other handicaps, emotional disorders, for example, may do the same thing. In both instances, the intent is to lessen parental embarrassment caused by a child's performance. Educators acknowledge that this happens but not, they say, with teachers or administrators who are competent and ethical.

Science has no sure idea what's wrong with the learning-disabled child. To the best of current understanding, the central nervous system apparently is not working adequately. Most learning-disabled children, researchers believe, have delayed or improper development of the central nervous system. This is usually termed maturational delay or lag, sometimes, developmental deviation. Maturational lag means in effect that the child's nervous system is not developing at the same rate as those of other children his age.

A child's growth ordinarily follows a well-timed developmental course. Society strives to create order. So it makes demands of children according to their age levels. But nature can break down. When development lags, a 6-year-old child can have the maturation of a 3-year-old in some of the things he does. A child of 10 might have maturation of a 6-year-old, and so on. Most psychologists and physicians who work with children ignore slow maturation. They say the child will catch up: the slow-to-speak child will speak; the clumsy child will gain control of his body. Many slow maturers do catch up—and many do not. But the key point, often ignored, is the effect on the slow-maturing child of his continuing failure in school and in social activities—the increasing criticism, scorn, rejection by teachers, family and age mates. The extreme damage to the child's basic image of himself can be devastating. If the basic learning disabilities go undetected and unremedied too long, the damage to a child's ego will be difficult or impossible to correct.

Much of what the learning-disabled child does is not intentional. He is not in control of his behavior or his inadequate learning performance. His physiological impairment seems to short-circuit what would be normal behavior or learning. The agony is unnecessary. By a combination of techniques, a team of qualified professionals —primarily in psychology, medicine and education—can identify most of these children. If the diagnosis is positive, education becomes the tool for improvement.

There is no cure for learning disabilities in the sense that a disease has a cure. The learning-disabled child, is considered cured if he begins to learn in accordance with what specialists believe to be his abilities, if he can function as a non-handicapped child would.

One point is very clear: Most of these boys and girls have the potential to lead fulfilling, productive lives. They are intellectually competent. With skilled and compassionate handling by parents and professionals, they can overcome much or all of their handicaps. ■

¶The rush for government funds. As government at the state and Federal levels begin to spend more on aid for the learning-disabled child, some school districts, critics say, attempt to include non-disabled children in this category in an attempt to qualify for more money. In the Education for All Handicapped Children Act, which is to take effect in 1978, Congress put a ceiling on the number of learning-disabled children who would qualify for Federal money at 2 percent of all those from age 3 to 21 who are handicapped.

¶Medication. A relatively small number of learning-disabled children require medication. As with any medication dispensed by prescription, drugs must be ordered by a physician experienced in learning disabilities who has examined the child and determined a need for medication. No one else—teacher, principal, school psychologist—can do more than suggest that a child be examined. Many pediatricians, neurologists and psychiatrists do not accept the use of medication. Dr. Sylvia O. Richardson, associate professor of pediatrics at the University of Cincinnati School of Medicine, disagrees. "No significant evidence has been offered to indicate that appropriate medication should not be used, provided the child is under proper medical supervision," she says.

Educators have a number of approaches concerning this child, how areas of weakness can be found and special methods and teaching materials can be used to overcome them. Larry, who is 9, is unable to write because he can't remember the visible form of letters long enough to put them down. His problem is one of translating what he sees into a pattern of motor behavior—in this case, the act of writing. One teaching method for him might involve a sensory approach: He may be asked to manipulate wooden cutouts of letters and feel with his fingers letters made of sandpaper. He may be asked to write words by copying them on specially prepared sheets of paper that contain markings to show him how to form letters, where to start and in which direction to go and what sequence of letters form different words.

Susan, 7, can't read. She has little awareness of the sounds of our language. If she can't recognize sounds when she hears them, she cannot associate the letters of printed words with their sounds. Her teacher first trains Susan to listen using one or several of many games that promote listening skills. She is led step by step in listening carefully to sounds and the differences among them, to tell them apart and repeat them to her teacher. Her teacher begins to point out slowly which letters represent which sounds. She then takes Susan through more complex words, enhancing her ability to associate sounds and letters until her reading

Pooling Local Resources

By JAMES FERON

YORKTOWN HEIGHTS, N.Y. — "Several years ago a child with a handicap in the Yorktown school district would probably be attending a special class in a church basement or some other rented quarters, part of a completely separate educational system," says Dr. Donald Coe, assistant director of special education for northern Westchester and Putnam counties.

"Today, that same district of a couple of thousand children has 11 classes in its own program for kids who need special help as well as eight 'resource' rooms we share jointly, handling perhaps 250 children in all."

What Dr. Coe was describing is a good example of how schools are being organized around what is described as the "least restrictive environment."

His part of the program is BOCES, or Board of Cooperative Educational Services, a postwar development by the state which has encouraged more than 700 school districts to combine resources and share programs in largely rural and suburban areas in the hope of producing more effective results.

Dr. Paul Irvine, director of special education in the district, said "There was a time, not just here but everywhere in the nation, when the decision was: should this child be placed in a special class in a special school, or should he be left where he is and sink or swim."

Now, Dr. Irvine said, there are many alternatives—special classes in local school buildings, for example, and the resource rooms in the same building where a range of disabilities can be handled for each child for half the day.

"We are in the third year of a three-year program to train regular classroom teachers to do a more effective job—a management job, really—with mildly handicapped kids right in the regular classroom," the director said.

Demographic changes have aided this form of mainstreaming, Dr. Coe said. "With the population pressure off, the local school districts have been able to provide us with more suitable classroom space. Eight years ago our district had only 10 classes in regular school buildings—the rest were in churches or elsewhere. Now we have 48 special classes right in the schools."

Dr. Coe described "the least restrictive environment," aimed at minimizing differences between handicapped and nonhandicapped children, by bringing his fingers together and touching his thumbs to form a triangle.

"At the top," he said, "there is full-time hospital care and at the bottom—the widest part—the regular school program. The object is to move children down through the various levels."

"A child spending all day in a special class of a regular school might move into the half-day resource-room program, where a BOCES teacher will be aware of physical or emotional as well as learning problems.

"From there," Dr. Coe continued, "the child may find he requires only the occasional assistance of our itinerant teacher program or that he can function perfectly well in the regular curriculum."

Dr. Irvine and Dr. Coe operate from administrative offices on a 240-acre BOCES campus in this northern Westchester community. It is a campus that also contains schools for the learning disabled (Walden) and the severely retarded (Pines Bridge). Their educational facilities are closer to the top of the narrow section of the triangle.

The basic principle, to keep the child as close to the main stream of education as possible, also works here, the officials say, where once isolated or even institutionalized children are brought together for learning.

"Take 10 kids for a walk," Jack Carey, principal of Pines Bridge School, said, "and the goal may be different for each one. They have different capacities."

He was standing outside the "Pines Bridge Market," a mock store doing a brisk business in plastic bananas, apples, grapefruit and celery. The business was in identification, matching and numbers skills.

The Walden School, like Pines Bridge, was open and surprisingly noise-free under a low ceiling. Frank Sink, a therapist in speech and language, said he enjoyed the informal concept with "classrooms" marked only by temporary arrangements of cabinets, shelves and other furniture.

"The kids seem to enjoy it," he said, "I can be sitting here eating my lunch or teaching a few children when a child from another group will come up with something he has done for my approval. They move back and forth like thtat all day."

How New York Screens

By JOSEPH MICHALAK

Faced with a growing number of handicapped children for whom it must provide education, the Board of Education in New York City is in the process of reorganizing what most persons agree is a cumbersome and often frustrating placement process.

Under the present system, the process starts in nine out of 10 cases when a student's school feels that it can no longer deal with him in a regular classroom. Other referrals are usually made by hospitals and physicians.

The child can be referred to one of six bureaus that concentrate on a particular handicap, one of three "pupil personnel bureaus," or one of nine units that do not fit into an existing bureau organization.

This system leaves a great deal to be desired because, as Bernard Gifford, the deputy school chancellor, noted in a recent report, "there is no single door through which all children must pass before entering a special education program." They must, in effect, "be prediagnosed before they can be sent to a diagnostic unit."

Beginning in September the two major placement agencies, the Bureau of Child Guidance and the Evaluation and Placement Unit, will begin a pilot project, in which referrals will be handled by a single team of clinicians. Dr. Gifford has recommended that eventually all evaluation and placement functions be consolidated and placed under the unit.

After a child is referred, the child and parents are interviewed, and the child undergoes three days of clinical and educational testing. If further tests are advisable, the staff psychiatrist, psychologist or neurologist may see the child, or a speech and language test may be ordered. The screening and evaluation usually take three to four months. It is designed that way, one official said, "to protect the child."

After the unit's group evaluation, a conference is held and the child is placed, but only with the approval of the parents. One of the staff members is assigned to each case as an "advocate" for a parent or child to go to for guidance when necessary.

In 10 percent of the cases, when the experts are not sure about the best course to follow, a child is put into one of the system's 22 pre-placement classes, situated at 18 schools, at Columbia University Teachers College and in hospitals in Bronx, Brooklyn and Manhattan.

If a parent is dissatisfied with his child's placement or program or is not getting services he should be getting, he can get a hearing through the Committees on the Handicapped set up last year in each of the school system's 32 districts. Agencies, school districts, school boards, medical and psychological experts and parents are represented on the committees. The city's special education division also maintains a Child Advocate Office, with a "hot line" for questions and protests.

Other units of the city's special education division also concern themselves with the state law requiring yearly evaluation of every handicapped child and a full re-examination every three years in which a child is under care.

Dr. Joel S. Rosenshein, director of the Evaluation and Placement Unit, noted that in his agencies, "we're lucky, with our present resources, to get 10 percent of the required re-examination completed."

The Board of Education also offers follow-up, referral and job-placement services for handicapped persons 16 to 21 years old through the Placement and Referral Center for Handicapped Students, Room 623, 131 Livingston Street, Brooklyn, New York 11201. The telephone is 624-0854.

The question of federal and state aid continues to divide the Jewish community. Orthodox Jews most strongly favor it while many others argue that such assistance would violate the First Amendment. The issue is less hotly debated now that Supreme Court decisions have ended all but minimal aid and dampened hopes for further help.

A potential problem arose with last year's decision by the Internal Revenue Service to eliminate tax exemptions to schools that draw racial lines. Dr. Morton Siegel, education director for the Conservative schools, said that this did not place Jewish schools in jeopardy, however, because the ruling "says nothing about limiting a school to a particular faith." Spokesmen for the other branches emphasize the same distinction. A small number of blacks attend day schools, Dr. Siegel says, on the basis that they are Jews seeking a Jewish education.

While the New York City area has 218 schools—including the largest, sponsored by ultraorthodox Simchat Torah in Brooklyn — the most remarkable growth has taken place in other areas. In the process, regional differences are appearing.

Rabbi Bernard Goldenberg, associate director of Torah Umesorah, notes that parents outside New York who send their children to Orthodox day schools are less likely to be Orthodox themselves. He cites a study of one Orthodox school in the West where 40 percent of the parents were Orthodox, 20 percent Conservative, 15 percent Reform and the rest unaffiliated. By contrast, Rabbi Goldenberg said, the solid majority of parents in a similar Brooklyn school would be observant Orthodox.

Outside New York City, he added, the day-school student is also less likely to return to an environment that reinforces the life encouraged in Jewish school. There are increasing efforts because of this to provide after-school social and cultural events for both parents and students to fill the gap.

Another trend in the West is toward experiments in joint sponsorship by Conservative and Reform temples. Such arrangements now exist in the San Fernando Valley in Los Angeles and in Denver.

Such partnership involving Orthodox congregations is less likely, though the Conservative movement generally tries to avoid setting up a school in competition with an Orthodox facility.

Orthodox practice requires a separation of sexes in high school, and only boys are allowed to pursue such disciplines as the deeper study of rabbinic writings. The Conservative approach is coeducational and focuses more on the Bible and less on rabbinic literature.

Finding qualified teachers for either classroom approach is a difficult chore. They must be fluent in Hebrew. Starting salaries range from $9,000 to $18,000 for those with special skills.

What matters most in discussing Jewish schools, according to many Jews, is how much the education strengthens Jewish identity. Here the data support those who believe that the schools make a lasting contribution to both a religious and cultural sense of a Jewish heritage.

Or watch "For Whom the Bell Tolls" with arroz con pollo and a talk on Spain in the 30's. "Gone With the Wind" might go nice with chicken and ribs and an evening of Civil War lectures. Dear Dr. Broadmoor,

I would like to have an appointment with you to discuss my paper that you returned to me today. When can I see you? I am very upset about my mark. That mark was unfair and I can prove it. I read two papers that you gave A to and they weren't any better than mine was. I want to give you a fair chance to prove that you are fair to all your students, not just affirmative-action students. Is Tuesday at 1:30 alright with you?

Respectfully,

Dear Sir:

I am applying for the position of deputy sheriff, as advertised in "Jobs in Philosophy." Although my doctorate is in history, not philosophy, I believe that I am well qualified and strongly motivated.

I will be glad to fly to Golden for an interview at your convenience and, should you hire me, I can start immediately. I look forward to your response.

Very truly yours,

A New Middle East Boom

By ERIC PACE

TEHERAN, Iran—The Omani Government is handing out free Korans to schoolchildren. A half-dozen new universities are sprouting in Iran. And the number of children enrolled in Saudi Arabian schools is to double by 1980.

A boom in education has been spreading across the Moslem Middle East, spurred by the upsurge in revenues that followed the series of oil-price increases beginning late in 1973.

Oil-producing countries from populous Iran to remote Oman have been opening new schools, founding or planning new universities and indulging in such educational luxuries as teaching by television.

The expenditures involved are often modest compared to the oil countries' vast outlays for military and industrial equipment, and the area's low literacy rates and deep-rooted traditionalism are powerful constraints on educational innovation.

Yet generally speaking the leaders of the nations in the area recognize the importance of education. The Egyptian Army's humiliating defeat at Israel's hands in the 1967 Middle East war was, for example, ascribed in part to the poor education of the average Egyptian soldier.

And so educational administrators are getting a share of the huge oil revenues: in Iran alone those revenues have reached an annual total approaching $20 billion. In 1974 the 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries spent about $50 billion on domestic expenditures, including education, out of their total oil revenues of $110 billion.

Patterns of recent educational spending vary widely from one oil land to another. Iran is a particularly striking case of the impact of this spending. The Iranian national budget for the 12 months starting May 21 provides for a 35 percent increase in educational outlays, to almost $2 billion a year. This makes education the third-largest item in the budget after military expenditures and housing.

Iran's almost absolute ruler, Shah Mohammad Riza Pahlevi, like many a head of a developing country, has emphasized the importance of imparting usable education. "Education encompasses so much more than the mere accumulation of formal information," he once observed, adding: "The Koran says that a man who amasses much knowledge without understanding how to apply it resembles a donkey burdened with a heavy load of books of which he is totally ignorant."

Accordingly the Government has emphasized efforts to teach poor people to read—although these have have had limited success: more than 60 percent of the population of 34 million is believed to be illiterate.

In 1974 the Shah declared that no Iranian should be denied an education because of financial need. Since then Government subsidies have extended to all types of educational institutions, including some private schools that did not want the funds.

Most of the ingredients of the Iranian educational boom are present to varying degrees in other oil-producing countries and even in such non-oil-producing countries as Jordan, which has been a major recipient of aid from Saudi Arabia and other oil-producing lands.

In what is now the United Arab Emirates the Government has drawn up an adult-education program that includes women, who have long been neglected by the educational systems of many Moslem countries. Where only traditional religious schooling was known 20 years ago, there are today 110 modern schools, according to a recent Government report. Plans have been made for a university.

The school system in Saudi Arabia is also being greatly expanded. The 1975-80 development plan calls for an increase in the number of schools from 3,335 to 5,318 and in the number of pupils from 791,000 to nearly 1.5 million. But in Saudi Arabia, which is particularly conservative, the subordinate status of women still impedes their education.

Another country with a strong conservative tradition, Oman, has increased both pupils and schools, an increase due mainly to the accession of a new ruler, Sultan Qabus bin Said, who has spent Oman's modest oil revenues far more lavishly than did his conservative father, Sultan Said, whom he overthrew. In an effort to combat the left-wing insurgency in Oman's southern Dhofar province, the Government has used its oil money to buy Korans for distribution to schoolchildren.

Like other Arab oil nations, Oman has brought in Arab teachers from other lands, notably Jordan, where aid from oil countries has been used to build up the National University, which turns out hundreds of teachers a year.

In Iran—a Moslem but not Arab country—the Government has founded or begun setting up a half dozen new university-level institutions since the great oil boom began. To provide more teachers for Iran's expanding schools and population, the existing teacher-training college here in the capital has been expanded, given mor[e] and upgraded to a university.

The Government has also be[gun] is called here the Free Unive[rsity] attempt to create something re[sembling] the British Open University. of a campus and conventional students will learn through t[elevision] and teaching machines at hundred centers around the More than 20 centers are al[ready in] operation. In addition, the country's con[ventional] university facilities are being at various locations, including dan in Western Iran, wher[e] Sina University is in the advan[ced plan]ning stage—although classes yet begun.

North Vietnam Puts the Emphasis on Literacy

By LADY BORTON

"It is hard for you Americans who have always had schools to understand the enthusiasm of our people for literacy classes," said Nguyen Van Trao, an official of the North Vietnamese Department of Education. "In French colonial times, only monks and mandarins could read. The peasants were dependent on the mandarins, who often exploited them. Even today the written word has great importance for us Vietnamese."

Mr. Trao was discussing with me last year the literacy campaign that has been a key part of his Government's policy for 30 years. The campaign was begun by Ho Chi Minh a month after his declaration of independence from France in 1945, and continued through the years of warfare that followed.

When Ho Chi Minh issued his "Appeal to Fight Illiteracy," only 20 percent of the Vietnamese were able to read and write. The North Vietnamese Government says that by 1965, 95 percent of the population was literate. While there is no way of independently confirming that figure, there is no doubt that Hanoi has mounted one of the most extensive literacy campaigns of recent decades.

"Our task was great," Mr. Trao recalled. "We had to design a new educational system to serve our socialist revolution. We had to retrain teachers schooled like me in the old colonial system. All the textbooks were in French. We had to write new ones in Vietnamese and create Vietnamese words for the French scientific and technical terms."

Ho Chi Minh's "Appeal" specified that instruction be given using quoc ngu, a Romanized script that replaced Chinese-style ideographs. Unlike the ideographs, with separate characters symbolizing each word in the language, and unlike Romanized Western scripts with their many irregularities, quoc ngu is entirely phonetic.

In addition, Vietnamese grammar has very simple tenses, no declensions and no conjunctions. This makes reading Vietnamese so straightforward that a literate Westerner unfamiliar with the language can learn to pronounce, although not to understand, written Vietnamese after a few hours' instruction.

A basic rote method for teaching quoc ngu was inherited from the French. Even today Vietnamese students learn to read by repeating sounds as the teacher points to the same letter or word written repeatedly on a blackboard. Similarly, students practice writing by repeating the same letter or word until they achieve dexterity.

Vietnamese educational materials continue to emphasize "revolutionary" ideas. One children's story book that I bought illustrates the concept of self-criticism. A nursery school child has been hitting other children. When "Uncle Ho" visits the school in the story and offers the children candy, the misbehaving child refuses. He has been naughty, he says, and does not deserve a reward. Ho Chi Minh commends him for his self-criticism, pats the child gently on the shoulder and gives him his candy.

Since 1958 the North Vietnamese have been stressing complementary education, a fundamental expansion of the literacy campaign. Each agricultural and industrial cooperative or village organizes classes in which adults can acquire a general education equivalent to what their children receive at school.

Complementary education remains an integral part of North Vietnam's educational system. With increas[ing educa]tion and insufficient time a generation of skilled tea[chers,] about 50 percent of the yo[ung people] go on to secondary school. do not pass high school ent[rance exam]inations work and atte[nd] complementary-education equivalent high school edu[cation. Cur]rently half a million adults classes, according to the N[orth Vietna]mese.
